First of all, I would like to thank Frans van Eemeren, my promoter. When I started this dissertation, he gave me the opportunity to decide what kind of research I would like to conduct within the framework of the NWO-project, of which this study is a part. His conscientious supervision, precise feedback and unwavering trust that problematic drafts of the texts would be followed by improved ones, were indispensible for the completion of this dissertation.

I thank Francisca Snoeck Henkemans, my co-promotor, for sharing her specialized knowledge in various areas with me, even at moments when she had in fact no time for it. I thank Ton van Haaften, my second co-promotor, for his ability to keep track of the complete picture, which helped me to avoid the many blind alleys and other distractions that exist in this area of work. My gratitude and appreciation also extends to Peter Houtlosser, who regrettably did not live to see this dissertation defended. It was Peter who convinced me, six years after my graduation, to write this dissertation. In doing so, he did something which I consider truly special.

My colleagues at the department of Speech communication, Argumentation Theory and Rhetoric have provided a great many useful comments on my project, especially during the departmental research colloquiums in which I was given the opportunity to report on the progress of my work. I thank Bart Garssen, Eveline Feteris, Bert Meuffels, Jean Wagemans, José Plug and Leah Polcar, who has recently left Amsterdam to take up work in the United States.

I also thank my fellow PhD students for the discussions we have had. Some of them were more useful than others, but they were always conducted enthusiastically. These colleagues, moreover, guaranteed that my fear of a lonely PhD-life never materialized. I think in particular of Dima Mohammed, Lotte van Poppel, Ingeborg van der Geest, Merel Boers and Tien Nicolaas, and of course of my office mates, Marcin Lewinski and Roosmaryn Pilgram.
Other people have been involved in this study in a more practical way. I thank Duncan Harkness for correcting my English. The parents around me, Louis and Kitty Tonnard and Mieke Groen, I thank for the many hours that they have made it possible for me to work without any interruption on my dissertation. Without their help, this dissertation would not yet have been completed.

Finally, the realization of this study would not have been possible without the grant of the National Science Foundation of the Netherlands (NWO) (dossier-nummer 360-80-030). Their financial support for the project Strategic maneuvering in argumentative confrontations: Norms and criteria, manifestations and effects made it possible to carry out this research.
