This book is the final product of a journey that started many years ago, when I travelled to Rosario, Argentina, for the first time in 1997 for my Master thesis. Looking back after so many years I realize that this first experience sowed the seeds for my future research interests and for my ongoing fascination with this country. The people I met back then are still friends whom I visit every time I travel to Argentina. At the same time, in the context of this dissertation, I was able to make many new friends, have inspiring encounters with many different people, and experience the collaboration and support of colleagues, supervisors, friends and family. All of them contributed to making this project an incredible experience that I would not have wanted to miss for anything in the world, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank them.

In the first place I want to thank all the people in Argentina who were willing to talk with me about their experiences, their interpretations of the past and the present, and their hopes for the future. I am greatly indebted to them for making this research possible. The list of individual persons is too long to name here, but I would like to express special thanks to Valeria Barbuto, Carmen Cáceres, Verónica Jeria, Jean de Wandelaer, Martín Chamorro, Licia López de Casenave, Gabriel Martín and Osvaldo López, who were not only willing to talk with me on various occasions, but also helped me through their contacts and documentation. I am particularly indebted to Valeria, who always took the time to talk to me even though she was extremely busy, and generously gave me access to a number of important documents. Many former political activists and victims of the dictatorship agreed to share their life stories with me as well as their contacts within the human rights movement. To all of them I wish to express my profound gratitude, not only for their time but also for their trust. I am especially indebted to Isabel Fernández Blanco, Isabel Cerrutti, Claudia Pereyra, Eduardo Anguita, Marisa Sadi, Cotita Casado, Carmen Lapacó Aguiar, Clara Petrakos and Noemí Ciollaro. I particularly want to thank the two Isabels and Noemi, who became friends along the road and have been extremely kind and generous with their insights and contacts. A special thought also goes out to Mabel Gutiérrez, Pastor José de Luca and Carlos Eroles who contributed to this research and sadly passed away before its completion.

This research would not have been possible without the help of numerous organizations and institutions in Argentina. Many thanks to Memoria Abierta, CEDINCI, the Núcleo Memoria of the IDES and the library of the Asociación Madres de Plaza de Mayo for their extensive documentation and helpful employees. Special thanks go to Patricia Valdéz, Silvina Segundo, and Gonzalo Conte of Memoria Abierta. I am particularly indebted to Gonzalo, with whom I had numerous insightful formal and informal conversations on the human rights movement. The Comisión Provincial por la Memoria in the city of La Plata introduced me to its work and put me into contact with a memory project in the city of San Nicolás. Many thanks also the employees of the Under-Secretariat of Human Rights of the City of Buenos Aires, the National Secretariat of Human Rights, the Comisión pro
Monumento and the Instituto Espacio para la Memoria for taking the time to introduce me to their work. I am also grateful to the team of guides of the ESMA, and especially to Andrés, who gave me a passionate guided tour and an extremely informative interview. Many thanks also to the collaborators of the Biographical Archive of Abuelas for taking the time to discuss their work with me. And to individual members of CELS, APDH, SERPAJ, MEDH, Liga, Asociación de Ex Detenidos Desaparecidos, Madres Línea Fundadora, Abuelas, Familiares, Hermanos, H.I.J.O.S., Buena Memoria, the EAAF, CODESEDH, and the Fundación Memoria Histórica y Social Argentina for introducing me to their work. Thanks also to the team of archaeologists of Mansión Seré, and especially to Antonella, Damián, Emiliano and Gustavo, who invited me to participate in several of their activities. Thanks to the Comisión por la Memoria de Liniers, Villa Luro and Mataderos, and especially to Rosalía and Yolanda, who not only agreed to talk with me for many hours, but also invited me to several of their activities. I was also able to participate in some activities and meetings of the Mesa de Escrache Popular and I especially want to thank Florencia for introducing me to them. In the neighbourhood of Floresta, I am greatly indebted to María Graciela and Daniela, who introduced me to the neighbourhood, and to Gabriel and Marcela, who invited me to the activities of Vecinos por la Memoria. I also wish to express my sincere gratitude to the Mesa de Trabajo y Consenso of El Olimpo for accepting my presence at several of their meetings and to its individual members for their willingness to share their points of view with me.

While in Argentina, I also met many colleagues who gave me valuable clues to understanding the complex Argentine context and to ask the right questions. Conversations with Darío Barriera, Hilda Sábat, Hugo Vezzetti, Rosana Guber and the late Dora Schwartzstein helped me to fine-tune my research questions. Pablo Bonaldi was kind enough to share a draft version of his work on H.I.J.O.S. with me. Maru Mendizábal helped me a lot by giving me a useful book on culture and politics in Argentina and by sharing her views on memory sites with me. Felipe Pigna's classes on Argentine history were inspiring in many ways. Federico Lorenz generously offered me his time and knowledge on the subject, and lent me his vast collection of newspaper articles collected over the years. Noa Vaisman has an eye for ethnographic detail from which I learned a lot. I still have great memories of our joint attendance of the resistance march of 2004-2005, when we discussed Argentine politics while walking around the pyramid of the Plaza de Mayo. Finally, I owe a very special thanks to Inés Ulanovsky, whom I met at the beginning of my fieldwork and who introduced me to several of her contacts. Her introduction proved of crucial importance in gaining access to the human rights movement.

Many people made me feel at home during my stay in Argentina. Federico Villalpando made me streetwise in Buenos Aires, and he and Clarisa and Fernando proved great company in my spare time. Roberto Testa, whom I interviewed about his moving documentary Flores de Septiembre, became a friend and I truly enjoyed our heated Friday night discussions in the pizzeria. Marieke Denissen was doing her fieldwork in the same period as I was, and we had some great times exploring the various restaurants of the city. Mariana Pérez introduced me to the work of Abuelas and it was a pleasure receiving her and José in Utrecht. I am also particularly indebted to Mariana for reading the manuscript in the last phase before sending it to the commission. Her comments and encouragements helped me to finish it and I owe her many thanks for that. I also thank my friends in Rosario who have accompanied me on this journey and who introduced me to life in Argentina many years ago. I would like to express very special thanks to the family Hiba, whom I came to consider as my second family in Argentina. I am particularly indebted to Jorgelina and Germán for the numerous asados and dinners at their home, and to Amanda and Juan Carlos, who also welcomed me on many occasions. When I travelled to Rosario in the weekends, I always stayed at Laura and Conne’s place, which felt like a second home to me. I am very grateful to them for their hospitality and friendship. Many thanks also to Toti, who always tried to make some time to see me when I was in Rosario. Finally, I am truly indebted to Luciana and Leo, who received me on numerous occasions in their home, first in Montevideo and later in Rosario. My stays with them always felt like a ‘warm blanket’ and I have many marvellous memories of these holidays. I also owe special thanks to Luciana’s parents, who invited me to stay at their place when Luciana was living with them in Rosario, and with whom I spent a wonderful Sunday in the countryside.

Back in the Netherlands, many institutions, colleagues, family and friends made a major contribution to this project. First of all, I am particularly indebted to my supervisors, prof. dr. Michiel Baud and dr. Barbara Hogenboom. Their constructive criticism, their patience and their encouragement have helped me through this process. Michiel Baud also played a decisive role in the initiation of this project, for it was he who introduced me to the subject of the military dictatorship by inviting me to work as a research assistant for an investigation on this topic. This experience motivated me to submit a WOTRO proposal. His support for the project has been of crucial importance. Together with Barbara they have formed a perfect supervising team. I want to thank them both for having remained supportive throughout these years.

Several of the chapters of this book were reviewed by the members of OLA. Their feedback was always useful and I owe them many thanks for reading my rather too long drafts. The CEDLA institute provided a stimulating work environment and I would like to thank the academic staff and the staff of the library and of the secretariat for this. Special thanks go to my PhD colleagues Azusa, Griet, Beatrice, Juan Carlos, Mariana and Lorena, who made this individual journey a collective one. In 2008 I exchanged the CEDLA environment for that of the Democratization and Peace building department of ICCO and Kerk in Actie. I want to thank my new colleagues for their continued interest in the progress of my research. I would especially like to thank Paula Dijk for her encouraging support in the last two years, and Annet Ijff for willingly accepting my request to take a sabbatical of a month to be able to advance on the manuscript.

There are also several institutions and individuals in the Netherlands who made this book possible. In the first place I thank WOTRO for the funding of this research. CEDLA offered me a work environment. The Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research paid for the publication of the book. Geo-media of the University of Utrecht realized the layout of the book. Bernardo, Marilina and Roberto transcribed most of the interviews. The summaries were translated by Bozz text & translations. Jorgelina Hiba double-checked the Spanish translation and my mother Laetitia van Haren the translation into Dutch. I am grateful for their willingness to do so at such short notice. They were both also of great help on other language issues that arose during the writing process. Kumar Jamdagni skilfully edited the English of the manuscript. Without his amazing speed and flexibility I would never have managed to finish the manuscript on time. Many thanks to all.

I would certainly have found it much more difficult to finish this book without the support of family and friends in the Netherlands. Many thanks to Elisabet, Iris, Jantine, Jennifer and Judith for the discussions and elaborate lunches we had, especially in the first few years of this project. Annemiek, Chantal, Jantine, Janneke, Elisabet and Marieke have been friends for many years and I am still grateful for that. Janneke also came to visit me in Argentina and it was great to be able to share my new home with her. Elisabet and Chantal will be my two paranimfen during the defence. Elisabet has been a perfect sparring partner with whom I could discuss my doubts and dilemmas concerning the research and many other things. Since we first met as neighbours in the J.P Coenstraat, Chantal has been present at all the most important moments of my life. I cannot think of two people better able to support me on the day. I am also truly indebted to Roeland’s family, who patiently tolerated my frequent absences at family events, and to my grandmother, whom I could not visit as much as I would have wanted in the past two years. Finally, I would like to express my deepest gratitude to my parents Jiddo and Laetitia and to my sisters Angélique and Ghislaine. I cannot thank them enough for their loving encouragement and support. They have accepted my frequent stress attacks and absences during family holidays to write this book. My parents also provided me with a sense that the world is there to be explored, something for which I will always be grateful. My greatest debt, however, is to Roeland, who has accompanied me along this journey from the very beginning. He has been of invaluable support in many different ways. He has not only helped me with numerous practical things, from making the table of contents, to arranging the illustrations or even cooking almost every evening in the last two years, but has also given me the emotional support I needed to finish the book. With his unrestrained optimism and energy, he shows me the bright side of life and makes me laugh every day.
