I would like to offer special thanks to Ruud Peters, who has been a dream supervisor. Ruud not only helped me to grow academically and remained accessible at all times, but he gave valuable comments at each stage of this project while also granting me the freedom to steer my own boat. It has been a privilege and pleasure to know him, let alone be his PhD student.

This thesis would not have been possible without Emre, my lovely son. That would be my brief answer to people who keep asking me how I managed to finish my thesis while half-way through, I gave birth. He is the sunshine of my life, and will always be so. It has not been always easy to leave him every day in order to conduct research in various places in Amsterdam, wondering how he might be doing at home. But over time, I found that my domestic and intellectual lives sustained one another beautifully and productively. I found that ideas for the thesis might come when I was cooking food for Emre or pushing his buggy along the streets. With him, I learned different ways to study in often surprising conditions, and more importantly, I learned to organize my work very effectively. Emre has added magical layers to my life that enriched me in every way and opened up my mental faculties.

Of course, there is my husband, Ali, whom I feel lucky to have met and brought into my life ten years ago. Although his area of expertise is entirely different, he was extremely interested in my project from the start and supported me at every stage. He read every single line of my thesis, gave me his opinions and challenged me with his ideas. It is mostly through intense discussions with him that many ideas took shape and developed. I am greatly indebted to Ali for many things.

My parents deserve special thanks. My mother has been an incredible source of emotional support for me. Her words shook me from my inertia and from miniscule depressions I found myself in now and then, giving me the ability to rise up and be thankful to life itself. Without hesitation, she gave practical support whenever it was required. She accompanied me to Ankara when I needed to conduct an interview with Beyza Bilgin and do field research. She took care of Emre when I attended conferences abroad, giving me much peace of mind. Then there is my father, whose personality I admired from a very early stage of my childhood. I feel extremely privileged to have him in my life. He is the wisest person I have known, with a strong will for knowledge. He too, supported me throughout the thesis, keeping close track of my progress. But I thank him most for his love to me which always makes me feel special.

I would also like to thank friends and colleagues from the Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis (ASCA). In particular, I wish to thank Esra Almas for being there for me whenever I was in a bad mood, or stressed. We took similar journeys and it has been a great pleasure to have her near me. Levent, Stella, Niall, Hanneke, Zeynep and Carolyn made me smile whenever I saw them at the school. Eloë Kingma has been always available to answer questions about the bureaucratic side of the work. Suzan Stocker from ASCA and Amy Kenyon have helped me with writing skills at various stages of my thesis, and I am thankful for that. I should add that the completion of this project was made possible by the Huygens Scholarship and an ASCA Finishing Scholarship Award.

I am further indebted to the insights and special friendship of Aslı İkizoğlu, İdil Impink, Mirjam Ekdöm, Deniz Erk and Hanife Arifova Mehmedova (or just “Abla” as Emre says it) as well as my extended beautiful family that I have in Istanbul. Lastly, I want to thank the lovely staff of Café Belmondo on the Albert Cuypstraat who welcomed me with friendly smiles everyday; who found and returned whatever I forgot there the previous day; the café where I did last revisions for this dissertation.
