Writing this thesis on Istanbul, my home city, in Amsterdam involved multiple journeys. Along the path I had the support of inspiring friends, colleagues, and students, and meet inspiring people whose presence enriched my experience of the city and the university. Here I would like to thank some of them.

I had the privilege to start my journey as part of the Literary Studies Department and ASCA. For all that, I am grateful to Mireille Rosello, whose research and supervision has been a constant source of inspiration during this study. She not only helped my project find a new home in Amsterdam and funding, but she also encouraged me to explore and discover the different paths it took. In ASCA, I would like to thank Christoph Lindner for his practical and academic advice and for opening up a new avenue for my project. I would also like to extend my thanks to my colleagues in the Literary Studies Department, notably Esther Peeren and Murat Aydemir, who gave full support both in my teaching and in my shift to research later.

My work benefited from participating in the ASCA Theory Seminars and the drinks afterwards, the Cities Project, and the Utrecht University Postcolonial Initiative. Dilek Doltaş, Emily Apter, Jale Parla, Maureen Freely, and Sandra Ponzanesi provided valuable insight into my work in its various stages.

The rules and regulations of the university have been a pleasure to find out thanks to Ania Dalecki, Eloë Kingma and Jantine van Gogh, who have always been there with their sunny smiles. An important part of my experience was co-organizing the 2009 ASCA mini conference and ASCA 2010 International conference; I would like to thank Erin LaCour, Melanie Schiller and Lara Mazurski for making it work. Niall Martin, Thijs van den Berg, Rob Allen, and Hanneke Stuit were great office-mates, ready to share their work and ideas and to try the cafés around Bungehuis.
My heartfelt thanks go to Anthony Pavlik for helping me mount my ideas into a full proposal; to Sinan - Zeynep Erbelger and Tuliz Eyüboğlu for their support when changing countries; to Seda Müftügil for being a fellow soul; to Erinç Salor and Canan Maraşlıgil for the best risotto and for making me at home in their house; to Margreet Vermeulen and Marjan Nijborg for always being up for cocktails after work; to Tim Yaczo for being a great flatmate and for cleaning up my work, and to Oğuzhan for the layout. Lara Mazurski has been a true friend and a great colleague, without her my stay in Amsterdam and my work would not be the same. Finally, I would like to express my love and gratitude to Jago Philippens for being there for and with me; and to my parents, my sister Cemile Baştımar, my cousins Sibel-Tülin Almas, Vedat Aybar and my extended family, who have inspired, encouraged and supported me in every step of my life.
