There is a Vietnamese proverb: Đàn ông đi biển có đôi/ Đàn bà vượt can mồ có một mình - roughly translated as “A man goes to sea with his mate/ A woman has to cross the land all by herself.” “Cross the land” metaphorically refers to the act of giving birth, and if you consider this book as my mental child - and not an easy one at that - then luckily I did not have to bear it alone because many people has in one way or another contributed to its coming into being.

I owe my biggest debt to the participants who took part in this research. There would be no case studies and empirical findings if these women and girls did not come out and share with me their rape experiences. Due to the sensitive nature of the research, and to protect the anonymity of those individuals involved, I cannot thank them enough by name. To them I dedicate this work.

As luck would have it, I have been fortunate to have as my promotores Professor Frances Gouda, a scholar on post-colonialism, and Professor Oscar Salemink, an anthropologist focusing on Vietnam. Their inspiring guidance and thoughtful feedbacks were instrumental in enabling me to reflect profoundly on the bulk of my field data, helping me define and refine the various drafts both structurally and substantially as the work progressed. Besides, their incisive critiques helped me sharpen my analytical tools without losing sight of the theoretical framework within which I endeavoured to find answers to the key questions.

Dr. Petra de Vries, my co-promotor, has given me unwavering support from Day One when she supervised my Master’s thesis up to the time I completed this doctoral dissertation. I have benefited a great deal from Petra’s vast knowledge of gender-related questions and most of all I treasure her kind support and warm friendship. Without Frances, Petra and Oscar I would not have been able to stay on course for the completion of this work. To you I express my heartfelt gratitude.

My PhD project was possible thanks to generous fundings from the Netherlands Organization for international cooperation in higher education (NUFFIC) and the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR), University of Amsterdam, for which I am very grateful. I am also thankful for the kind assistance the Toyota Foundation gave me in conducting an earlier research in Vietnam from December 2004 to March 2006.

During my stay in Amsterdam, I enjoyed the friendship and support of Stans van Egmond, Josien Pieterse, Maruja Bobo Remijn, Marcel Maussen, Leo Goetstouwers and Gary Price during some of the most enjoyable but also trying periods of my life. I am also thankful to Bert van Dien, Johnny Vu, Chi Mai, Jade Phan and Lotte Nijhof for their generous hospitality and kindness. Special thanks go to LaiFung for allowing me to use his painting “Dealing with the tide” as the cover for this publication, Lizzy van Leuwen for her excellent translation of the summary into Dutch, and Nguyễn Bảo Trang for a preliminary draft of the Vietnamese version.

At the Amsterdam Institute of Social Studies and Research, I enjoyed the company of colleagues who not only introduced me to their various discussion groups but also offered me a congenial atmosphere for sharing experiences and exchanging ideas on topics that concerned us all, academically or otherwise. For this I thank particularly Marieke van Eijk, Shifra Kirsch, Diana van Bergen, Jonathan Dapaah, Erica van der Spijpt, Ana Miskovska Kajevska, Pride Linda, Malini Sur and Christian Scholl. Maybritt Jill Alpes became a dear friend whom I considered as my em [little sister] during my last months at the AISSR.

I am also grateful to Jose Komen, Yomi van der Veen, Hermance Mettrop, Roos de Jager, Nicole Schulp, Miriam May, Anneke Dammers, Teun Bijvoet, Michiel Bass and Iwan Ellis for their generous support in smoothing out administrative issues during the time I spent at the Oost-Indisch Huis. A move to the Binnen Gasthuis proved to be a pleasant surprise thanks to the warm welcome and efficient support I received from the secretariat there, especially from Leila Abouyaala and Samira Laazane. Besides, I thoroughly enjoyed the company of my new office-mates: Yang LiJing, Bouchra Arbaoui, Mara Wesselling and Jesse Hoffman, among others. I also wish to thank Marc van Steekelenburg at the Staff Immigration Office of University of Amsterdam for his help in handling my residence permit.

At the National University of Hanoi, I wish to express my gratitude to Prof. Nguyễn Văn Khánh, Rector of the College of Social Sciences and Humanities, and Prof. Lâm Bá Nam, Head of the Department of Anthropology for giving me a leave of absence to go abroad for further study. Among teachers and colleagues, I would like to thank Prof. Phan Phương Thảo, Prof. Nguyễn Hải Kê, Prof. Nguyễn Văn Chính, Dr. Hoàng Anh Tuấn, Dr. Nguyễn Tuấn Anh and Lê Anh Xuân for their moral and practical support at various stages during my stay abroad.

In Hà Nội, I benefited from the cooperation and friendship of Mrs. Hoàng Thuý Lan, Director of the Research Center for Family Health and Community Development (CEFACOM). I am thankful for the assistance provided by the following institutions and organizations: The National Assembly’s Resource Center, the People’s Supreme Court, the Archive Unit of the Ministry of Justice, the Institute of Social Development Studies, the First Aid and Emergency Services at the National Hospital of Obstetrics and Gynecology, the shelter Ngôi nhà Bình yên [Peaceful House] at the Center for Women and Development of Vietnam Women’s Union, the hot-line counseling program offered at Ngôi nhà Tuổi trẻ [Youth House] of the Center of Reproductive Health for Adolescents of the National Youth League, the Center for Counseling and Women’s Health Care of the Hanoi Health Bureau, the Public Security Departments of the Districts of Gia Lâm, Dong Da and Hoàn Kiếm. All helped me with access to various information sources which were important to this research. I am grateful to Dr. Dương Tuyết Miên of Hanoi University of Law, Lieutenant Colonel Dr. Trần Văn Luyện of the Ministry of Public Security and Dr. Vũ Công Giao of the Lawyers Association of Vietnam for their valuable and expert advice on legal matters. My rudimentary knowledge of psychology and Post Traumatic Stress Disorder was buttressed by long exchanges with experts in the field, among them Tuyet- Le Brown, Hoa Adam, David Tree and others at the monthly case conferences coordinated by the International Organization for Migration in Hanoi in 2007.

I should also like to thank Dr. Trần Hưu Sơn, Director of The Lào Cai Bureau of Culture, Sports and Tourism, and his staff for all their support and assistance during my one-month field trip to Lào Cai province in 2007. I deeply appreciate the courage and enthusiasm shown by my research associates in both Hà Nội and Lào Cai.

I was fortunate to have enjoyed the friendship and intellectual support of Prof. Helle Rydström of Lund University, Prof. Tine Gammeltoft of the University of Copenhagen and Prof. Lynne Kwiatkowski of University of Colorado Denver during the writing of this work. I am also appreciative of the help Dr. Lý Hành Sơn of the Institute of Anthropology in Hanoi, and Prof. Trần Văn Đoàn of National University of Taiwan have given me in clearing up some problems of terminology.

I am hugely thankful to my gia đình, especially my Hai Bà who have given me unfailing support and loving care while I was away from home in my academic pursuit.

Exceptional thanks to Cao Xuân Tứ. Tứ not only helped me get through a number of intellectual challenges and overcome a string of emotional crises, but also brought me great happiness. It was Tứ who first encouraged me to take up this challenging project right from the start. I am grateful for his cheery efforts in making this text as readable as could be.
