The coming into being of this dissertation took a little over four and a half years and its conception, development and completion would not have been possible without the help, cooperation, comments, and encouragement of many.

I first want to thank my promotor Henk Schulte Nordholt for his guidance both during fieldwork and during the long process of writing. I am happy he allowed me the freedom to explore the many theoretical and ethnographic tangents that caught my fancy –some more successful than others, yet always tightened the reins whenever I would veer too far off course. I would furthermore like to thank my co-promotor Gerry van Klinken for his endless support and suggestions. Also, I want to express my gratitude to my co-promotor Oskar Verkaaik for his ever clear and helpful comments. Finally, I would like to thank the members of my reading committee, Joel Robbins, Patricia Spyer, Niko Besnier, Mario Rutten, and Jacqueline Vel, for their critical reading of this dissertation.

This particular PhD project is part of a larger KNAW1-funded research program called ‘In Search of Middle Indonesia’. I therefore want to thank the KNAW for making our search possible. Also, I want to thank all the supervisors and scholars connected to Middle Indonesia for providing us PhD candidates with a unique environment to think through our respective research projects: Ben White, Mario Rutten, Patricia Spyer, Mohtar Mas’oed, Pratikno, Tamrin Amal Tomagola, Cornelis Lay, Pujo Semedi, Ratna Saptari, Bart Barendregt, Gerben Nooteboom, Noorhaidi Hasan, Erwan Purwanto, Joe Errington, Chris Brown, and Jane Newberry. Mostly, however, I want to thank my fellow Middle Indonesia PhD colleagues: Basri Amin, Wenty Minza, Suzanne Naafs, and Amalinda Savirani. These past few years would have been so much harder without your support, sympathy, and –most importantly- great sense of humor.

I, furthermore, feel very fortunate to have profited from not just one but two excellent academic environments. This dissertation also greatly benefited from the opportunities offered to me at the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research. I want to thank José Komen, Hermance Mettrop, Teun Bijvoet, Anneke Dammers, Miriam May, Roos de Jager, Yomi van der Veen, Emilie van Tol, and Joanne Oakes for smoothening out all administrative and budgetary burdens. Many thanks to Cristina Garofalo, Erna de Boer and Muriel Kiesel at the Spinhuis as well. I also want to thank the members of the Asia Club for their critical discussions of chapters I presented. Much gratitude goes out to my AISSR PhD colleagues for much stimulation during and after work, in particular to Michiel Baas, Jasper Blom, Nynke Wiekenkamp, Malini Sur, Alpha Amirrachman, Deasy Simandjuntak, Sanneke

I would also like to thank the Australian Netherlands Research Collaboration for funding a two-month visit to the Research School of Asian Pacific Studies (RSPAS) of the Australian National University in Canberra. At RSPAS I am particularly indebted to James Fox for his willingness to act as my sponsor, and for great conversations over afternoon tea.

No matter how stimulating my various academic environments have been, I learnt most in Kupang. I am indebted to so many people who allowed me access to their departments, homes, and lives, and who were willing to engage in discussions with me. I cannot begin to name everyone who made my time in Kupang such an unforgettable and valuable experience. Nevertheless, I am very grateful in particular to Rudi Rohi, Opa Leo Nisnoni, Pak Demos, and my wonderful Pilkada assistants: Godlief, Oscar, Rini, Zulaika, Konstan and Steven. I want to give my deepest thanks to Melan, Ongen, Remon, Lele, tante Tina, tante Ince, om Adi, and Nabila. You have shown me the centrality and importance of family ties in Kupang.

In this spirit, I also thank my mom Chris, my dad Michael, Bianca, Naresh, and Flora, for your love and support during this long process of labor that did not produce something nearly as cute as Rani and Nisha! Family matters, but so do friends. Not just in order to ‘get things done’ but also in hanging onto my (un)sanity. Annemarie Samuels, Sanne Westra, Marloes Sprakel, Rosalie Roggen, Kim ter Beke, Maria Manoliu, Brigid Morris, Yenkit Man and Dylan de Haseth have been indispensable in making me ‘rest my bow’ after too prolonged times of keeping it bent.

And at last: Jarrett Zigon. My love. Thanks for pushing me and for always pulling me back up. I will forever be grateful for your excellent skills as a Made Coach.
