

The Need for Primary Data and Assessment of Countering Violent Extremism (CVE) Policies

Norah Schulten

Copyright 2023 N. Schulten
Published by: Gildeprint
Published in Amsterdam
ISBN number: 978-94-6496-005-1

Psychopathology and Violent Extremism
The Need for Primary Data and Assessment of Countering Violent Extremism (CVE) Policies

ACADEMISCH PROEFSCHRIFT

ter verkrijging van de graad van doctor
aan de Universiteit van Amsterdam op gezag van de Rector Magnificus
prof. dr. ir. P.P.C.C. Verbeek
ten overstaan van een door het College voor Promoties ingestelde commissie, in het openbaar te verdedigen in de Agnietenkapel op maandag 8 januari 2024, te 14.00 uur

door Norah Schulten
geboren te Rotterdam

Promotiecommissie

Promotor(es):

dr. E.J. Doosje
dr. F.F. Vermeulen

Universiteit van Amsterdam
Universiteit van Amsterdam

Overige leden:

prof. dr. S.L. de Lange
prof. dr. K.P. van den Bos
prof. dr. J.N. Tillie
dr. A.R. Feddes
dr. E. Rodermond

Universiteit van Amsterdam
Universiteit Utrecht
Universiteit van Amsterdam
Universiteit van Amsterdam
Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam

Faculteit der Maatschappij- en Gedragwetenschappen

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements.....	7
1. Introduction.....	11
1.1 The necessity and controversies of clear concepts in the field of violent extremism and CVE.....	13
1.1.1 Radicalisation, violent extremism and terrorism.....	13
1.1.2 Countering Violent Extremism (CVE).....	14
1.1.3 Psychopathology.....	16
1.2 Contributions to society and academic research on violent extremism.....	16
1.2.1 Prevalence and relevance of psychopathology in violent extremism.....	16
1.2.1.1 Psychopathology, violent extremism and gender.....	17
1.2.2 Challenges in CVE around including severely mentally ill individuals.....	18
1.2.3 Social-psychological impact assessments of societal primary prevention programmes.....	19
1.3 A plea for the mixed model and multi-methods approach and practice-theory-based research...	20
1.3.1 Practice-theory-based mixed methods designs.....	20
1.3.2 Unique datasets and analyses to better understand CVE.....	21
1.4 Outline of the dissertation.....	22
1.5 References.....	24
2. Psychopathology and terrorism: State of affairs, gaps and priorities for future research.....	29
2.1 Preface.....	29
2.2 Summary.....	29
2.3 Introduction.....	33
2.4 Method.....	42
2.5 Prevalence of psychopathology among terrorists: Literature review.....	45
2.6 Psychopathology and the development towards radicalisation and terrorism: Theoretical basis.....	59
2.7 Research agenda recommendations.....	70
2.8 Conclusions and discussion.....	75
2.9 Appendix A.....	78
2.10 References.....	78
3. Gender differences in the mental health problems of individuals who are included in a Countering Violent Extremism (CVE) policy.....	83
3.1 Introduction.....	84
3.2 Method.....	91
3.3 Results.....	94
3.4 Discussion.....	96
3.5 References.....	101
4. Associations between gender, psychopathology and higher levels of violent extremism.....	105
4.1 Introduction.....	106
4.2 Method.....	110
4.3 Results.....	112
4.4 Discussion.....	116

4.5	References.....	120
5.	Practitioners' perspectives on the challenges of dealing with the interaction between mental illness and violent extremism in Countering Violent Extremism (CVE)	125
5.1	Introduction	126
5.2	Method.....	131
5.3	Results.....	134
5.4	Discussion.....	141
5.5	Appendix A. Overview of interviewees and their experience in CVE	146
5.6	References.....	147
6.	Preventing polarisation: An empirical evaluation of a dialogue training	151
6.1	Introduction	152
6.2	Method.....	157
6.3	Results.....	160
6.4	Conclusion and discussion	165
6.5	References.....	170
7.	Discussion and conclusion.....	173
7.1	The prevalence and relevance of psychopathology in individual pathways towards violent extremism	175
7.1.1	Women, psychopathology and pathways towards violent extremism	177
7.2	Psychopathology and challenges in the operational space of CVE.....	180
7.3	The importance of (psychological) impact assessments of P/CVE	182
7.4	Implications and future directions for a better understanding of violent extremism and policies that aim to prevent extremist violence.	184
7.4.1	Understanding the role of the forensic clinician in a CVE setting.....	184
7.4.2	The importance of positive framing in societal programmes	185
7.5	Conclusion	187
7.6	References.....	188
8.	English summary	191
8.1	The prevalence and relevance of psychopathology in individual pathways towards violent extremism	191
8.2	Psychopathology and challenges in the operational space of CVE.....	193
8.3	The importance of (psychological) impact assessments of P/CVE	194
8.4	Conclusion	195
9.	Nederlandse samenvatting	197
9.1	De prevalentie en relevantie van psychopathologie in individuele paden richting gewelddadig extremisme	197
9.2	Psychopathologie en uitdagingen in de operationele sferen van CVE	200
9.3	Het belang van psychologische impact-evaluaties	201
9.4	Conclusie	203

Acknowledgements

My PhD cover visualises how research on psychopathology and violent extremism is only a very small, contested topic in a very broad field that aims to better understand violent extremism. All the other endless empty post-its represent all the other factors that can play roles in the wicked problem of violent extremism and policies that aim to lower the chances of violent extremist attacks. While the topic of my PhD only deserves a limited amount of attention in the larger picture, I am still thankful I could contribute to this piece of the puzzle with the help of my supervisors, Floris Vermeulen and Bertjan Doosje. During my (clinical) Research Master Psychology at the UvA, I already knew I wanted to design my own PhD research on violent extremism.

Floris, because of your important practice-oriented research, I ended up at the UvA Political Science department. This department has become my home the past 7 years. I did my PhD part-time, because I also was a junior lecturer for the Political Science Bachelor. Floris, thank you for providing me with the freedom and confidence to design my entire PhD project with your always feasible and reasonable insights and helpful feedback on all the proposals, papers and presentations. Also, thank you for your indestructible calm and enthusiastic guidance that helped me to hold on and finish the project. It is not an easy field to work in. It has many dilemmas. However, five minutes after I arrived at all our meetings with many concerns and struggles, I felt calm again and able to continue and to overcome the hurdles.

Bertjan, the experience you especially have in research on violent extremism is inspirational. Thank you for guiding me through this PhD project. First of all, thank you for your help in obtaining funding for the starting task of this PhD (the WODC report). This project turned out to be the kickstart of my PhD theme. Furthermore, your Psychology and statistical knowledge made all the feedback on my papers very valuable. You always asked the right critical questions, and you were a guardian of ethical procedures when it came to interpreting statistics to gathering data. Right up to the end, you pushed me to do the extra work to make the analyses and the writings even better. Finally, thank you for always supporting this project until the very end, and for your confidence throughout the process.

Thank you Paul Gill for offering me a great opportunity to work at the UCL Crime Science department and to be a part of your inspiring research team. During my visiting research period at UCL, I developed many new ideas and you enabled me to follow up on them. As a result, I was able to write papers that fill a major gap in the literature. Concerning the UCL team, I would also like to especially thank Caitlin Clemmow and Amber Seaward. Without their support, I would not have been able to write these papers.

My research would not have existed without all the help of all the professionals, experts and beneficiaries of societal programmes who participated in interviews and who filled out surveys. I greatly appreciate your time and effort, thank you. Additionally, thank you to the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR) for enabling me to conduct this PhD research.

It is important for me to thank other colleagues at the Department of Political Science. Judith Huigens, thank you for being my supervisor, mentor and friend during my university (lecturer) career. It is great to have someone so professional, funny and friendly like you to look up to. You also finished your PhD next to teaching, so no one knows better what it is like. Whilst your mentorship was officially mainly for my lecturer position, you were always there throughout the whole PhD process to support me on the side-line. Marcel Maussen and Armèn Hakhverdian, you were the Bachelor directors when I was a beginning PhD student and junior lecturer. Thank you for making it possible to find enough room next my (junior) lecturer position to pursue a career in research. I would like to thank the Challenges research (PhD) group and Wouter van der Brug specifically for supporting my PhD within this group, and providing feedback, help and support. Also, thank you to those many other colleagues who helped me with tips and advice and who helped me to prepare for the defence in many different ways, such as a mock defence.

Furthermore, the PhD has brought me great colleague-friends that I would like to thank. Luuc, how can one person know so much? I am honoured and thankful that you chose me to be one of your friends at our department. Isabelle, thank you for making the UCL times great, but also for making the tough corona lock-down times way more fun. I learned a lot from your academic spirit. Thank you to so many other great people I got to meet during my PhD and my time at the UvA. Daan, thank you for being my first peer reviewer of my first first-author paper. Thank you Said, Michiel, Giel, Pepijn, Larissa, Katja and many others for making my office-place at the UvA always the best place to go to. Because of all of you, it never felt as if I was an isolated PhD candidate. Finally, thank you to the entire UvA junior lecturer team for being amazing, and for teaching me about how to understand and work in this world a bit better.

The students of the Political Science department and PPLE of the UvA also deserve many words of thanks. Especially I want to thank the students who participated in my own courses on violent extremism. The course attracts students with a wide range of creative and intelligent views on violent extremism and policies that aim to prevent future violent extremist attacks. All perspectives are discussed. We discuss criticisms towards and the risks behind policies that interfere in a pre-violent extremist crime space. On the other hand we discuss theories that opt for (mental health) care-management on all levels of society, also in P/CVE policies. What is the right balance? How can we prevent harmful stigmatisation? Over the years, as a PhD candidate and as a lecturer, I have learned most about the complex topic of lowering the chances of violent extremism from discussions with my students and especially from their critical and constructive attitude and openness to insights that societal change brings.

Without all my friends who are basically family, it would not have been possible for me to finish this process. They were there for brainstorming about the papers, for practicing presentations, for partying, for helping me to get over stressful situations, and for just having the best time ever so that I regained energy to start working again on this project. There are a few friends specifically that I would like to thank. My Rotterdam crew was always there, since I was 4/6 years old. Thank you Isa, my paranymph, for always being willing next to your own insane busy job, to read and enthusiastically compliment everything that I have ever wrote. After I published my papers, you were genuinely interested. You are one of those people who can selflessly be interested and invest so much in others. Lies, for playing with horses, dogs and other animals when we were little children, for discovering Amsterdam in our 20's, and for the happy and stable entity you are in my life for ever, thank you. IIs, awesome how we started off as little crazy kids to now both having our PhD. Always home at your place. Scar, thank you for being a listening ear, your honesty is inspirational always.

I would also like to thank my friends that grew up with me together at the UvA where we all started as Psychology students. Han, my thanks is on a personal support level, because you know so well what concerns I had to overcome during my PhD, and because you always asked the right questions. However, because of your (research) career in clinical psychology, you were also an essential academic advisor and peer-reviewer for my research. I really enjoyed brainstorming together about our PhD research and your clinical insights. Ang, we met in our first tutorial class, and you always helped us to stay together as a group. Your friendliness is remarkable. In relation to this PhD, I am thankful for all the times I randomly stopped by your UvA PhD office on the same floor. You never sent me away. May, also my first-tutorial friend and my sparring-partner in life. I would like to thank you for showing me how to think as if everything is possible and how the sky is the limit. Nad, also a vital member in our group and the first one who has written an actual book. Thank you for your creative input and support.

Bart, I finished my 'werkstukje'! Yay. You make everything an adventure. Many thanks for many things, but one of the biggest is that you inspire me to go through difficult times in (PhD) life with a smile, courage, happiness and a fearless and grateful attitude. You focus on what is possible, rather than on what is not possible. You find positive elements in all aspects of life, and especially at the final stage of my PhD when I just wanted to be finished, you helped me to pull through. Ps. thank you to your mom, Rineke, who helped me out with some crucial editing issues in the last hours before submitting the whole book.

I have a huge family, and all of them are awesome. Ton, thank your kindness and support. Doina, thank you for your willingness to always review my English texts. Jeff, Hans, Eef, Mirjam, Karel, Fatima, Micah, Gaby, and the rest of my entire family (more than 50 names), thank you for the best family gatherings ever. They always help me to forget my research for a while, which is a good thing.

Finally, my final thanks is reserved for my sister and paranymph Sarah, and my parents Paul and Michal. Thank you for all the role models that all of you are. Watching you all gave me the confidence that I could pull this off. Papa, in every conversation, I have to stop you at one point because you can go on forever talking about politics, what you read about my research themes, and all other gossip stuff you read somewhere in books or papers. 'Books are holy' is the main message you taught us when we were kids. I unfortunately did not read Dante when I was 2 years old, but I am happy that I can add something holy to the world according to you. Thank you for the thousands of writings you proof-read throughout my entire life. Where teaching me Latin and Greek when I was very young did not always go as well, you taught me many things about my own subject successfully when I became older. Mama, you taught me how a mother can be the best mother ever and combine it with such a cool career. I know that it must not always have been easy, but you did it anyway. I learnt how to present and write from you. Endless days where you taught me how to structure a paper. Always blindly proud of us. Good to know that your pride and care will never fade, no matter what. Thank you. Finally, Sarah, thank you. I seriously do not know what to write down, because in your case it means thank you for all of the above comments I have said about others. Hopefully, with this PhD, I can inspire your kids Dilla and Moa. My favourite moments in life are with you and your kids.