

Clinical dilemmas in acute neurological disorders

1. With accurate assessment of cranial CT scans, anticoagulation-related delayed intracranial hemorrhage within 24 hours after head trauma will cease to exist.
2. Alcohol intoxication is a stroke mimic, but does not rule out posterior circulation stroke.
3. Low systolic blood pressure in a patient with ischemic stroke should prompt the clinician to look for underlying conditions, especially gastrointestinal bleeding, heart failure, or sepsis.
4. Endovascular treatment may not demonstrate significant benefits at group level, but could still be crucial for individual patients with cancer.
5. Some modern cancer treatments incur substantial costs to extend life by only a marginal amount. Such expenditures can only be justified if they also enhance quality of life.
