Writing this book was a most fascinating journey. It took me to many different places in Europe where I learned from insiders how Europe works. I enjoyed true hospitality in the beautiful English countryside, in the centre of modern Copenhagen and lively Madrid, in the classy Parioli and Monte Verde areas of charming Rome, in the overwhelming House of Lords, in Glasgow’s sophisticated Fantoosh bar, and closer to home, in The Hague. I enjoyed elegant Paris, visited skyscrapers in the heart of London, defied Greek strikes to get to the Headquarters of the National Secret Service in Athens, got a glimpse behind the scenes of the impressive Farnesina and the exclusive Quirinale in Rome, and became a regular customer at the European institutions in Brussels and Luxembourg.

Auke Baas, Charlotte Burns, Richard Corbett, Bart Driessen, Andrew Duff, Giuseppe Maria Buccino Grimaldi, Jean-Marc Hoscheit, Guillaume McLaughlin, Luuk van Middelaar, Jan Mulder, Silvano Presa and Maarten Smit all in their own way offered me both valuable insights and/or stimulating discussion.

Writing this book was also a constantly pleasant academic journey. I am particularly grateful to my supervisor, Tom Eijsbouts, for always being positive and inspiring. I am also grateful to the members of my doctoral committee, Damian Chalmers, Deirdre Curtin, Jit Peters, Jan Herman Reestman, Linda Senden and Bernard Steunenberg. Rodney Brazier and Joseph Jaconelli have shown true academic hospitality at the University of Manchester.

During this academic journey I have been accompanied by many to which I am grateful: my fellow Academic Club members Laurens Dragstra, Geranne Lautenbach, David Moszkowicz, Ceciel Rayer and Wolfgang Sakulin; my colleagues at the University of Amsterdam, in particular Ronald van Ooik, Jurian Langer and Thomas Vandamme; later, my colleagues at Utrecht University, in particular Sybe de Vries, Ige Dekker, Sacha Prechal and Marloes Ramp. I have been lucky to share my office with Ymke Hofhuis, Michael Frese, Hanneke van Eijken, Margot Aelen, Thomas Nauta and Marco Botta; I have been fortunate to learn from my (fellow) editors at the European Constitutional Law Review.
Herman van Harten and Martyn Top, I am honoured to have you as ‘paranimfen’.

I dedicate this book to my parents. Life is beautiful because of Dafna, and even more so with Noam.
