This research project has benefited from the encouragement and support I received from a large group of people. The first ideas for this research date back more than seven years, when I did my Masters in International Development Studies at Wageningen University and became interested in globalisation, mobility, and inequality. Thanks to the encouragement and help of Gert Spaargaren, Sven Kesselring, Peter Peters, Annette Freyberg-Inan and Maarten Hajer, I have been able to develop these first ideas into a research proposal that eventually received funding from the AISSR.

Over the past five years, many people have contributed to the successful completion of this research project. First of all, I would like to thank my respondents and everyone else who helped me in collecting data. In Indonesia, I wish to thank prof. Sjafri Sairin and dr. Pujo Semedi of Gadjah Mada University in Yogyakarta for facilitating my research visit. I am particularly grateful to government body BNP2TKI for granting access to the migrant terminal. Many thanks also to the staff at the Center for Indonesian Migrant Workers, who helped me to arrange interviews, and to Friska Fintalia in particular, who accompanied me on field trips to the migrants’ home villages. I am also indebted to the employees at the operational departments of Schiphol Airport and Soekarno-Hatta Airport, who allowed me to ‘follow’ them and gave me insight into the logistical challenges of regulating mobility at airports. Special thanks go out to Erik Derogée at Schiphol Group, Dieme Ketel at Angkasa Pura Schiphol, and Pak Hariyanto and Pak Hendarto at Angkasa Pura II for helping me to get this research project started.

The AISSR not only provided a grant to do this research, but was also a stimulating academic environment. I am deeply indebted to my three supervisors Mario Rutten, Peter Peters, and Giselinde Kuipers. Together they gave me the freedom to develop my own ideas, but also offered support, guidance, and critique when I needed it. In my first year, Mario Rutten stressed the importance of doing fieldwork and forbid me to read more books. That he made the effort to visit me in Indonesia shows what a dedicated supervisor he is. Later, in the writing phase, his critical reading of draft chapters and his suggestions for the ordering of the different chapters have been extremely helpful. Peter Peters I thank for thinking along with me in brainstorm sessions that sometimes lasted whole afternoons. These conceptual discussions allowed me to draw connections between my case studies that at first sight seemed so different. Giselinde Kuipers always read my draft chapters carefully and provided helpful comments and encouragement throughout.

In writing this thesis, I have greatly benefited from all the different courses, seminars, and reading clubs at the AISSR. The seminars of the Moving Matters program group and the...

Asia PhD club in particular were useful places to discuss work in progress. In these seminars, I learned a lot from the critical discussion of my own draft chapters and papers, as well as from the work of others. I am thankful in particular to Malini Sur and Sylvia Tidey, who gave valuable comments on early versions of chapters.

Over the years, I met many friendly and inspiring PhD colleagues, among whom Wenty Minza, Ay Mey Lie, Amalinda Savirani, Busarin Lertchavalitsakul, Helmy Fuady, Alpha Amirrachman, Roanne van Voorst, Athi Sivan, Najib Azca, Un Leang, Tjerk Jan Schuitmaker, and Ward Berenschot. For practical and administrative support I am grateful to Teun Bijvoet, Anneke Dammers, Yomi van der Veen, Joanne Oakes, Roos de Jager, Muriel Kiesel, Miriam May, José Komen, Hermance Mettrop, Michiel Baas, Emilie van Tol and Janus Oomen.

I was fortunate to have the Cosmobilities Network as a second academic environment. I learned a lot from discussing my work at summer schools and conferences organised by the network. I also benefited from feedback from Tim Cresswell, Pál Nyíri, Irma van der Ploeg, Tim Richardson, Willem van Schendel, and Anna Tsing.

During this PhD project, I have been on the move a lot, and I am very grateful for the support and friendship I have received in different places. In Amsterdam, my colleagues Frank van As, Marten Boekelo, Marieke van Eijk, Marcel van den Haak, Eline van Haastrecht, Ana Miškovska Kajevska, Anick Vollebergh and Marloes van Westrienen made it worthwhile to commute from Groningen to Amsterdam on a regular basis. Without our weekly ‘AA-meetings’ with their nice mix of intellectual and personal support, writing this PhD thesis would have been a lonely activity. In Indonesia, Vonny, Rully, Opet & Teguh, Meri, and Verena taught me how to enjoy life in Jakarta and made me feel at home there. A final word of thanks goes out to Franke, Marijn and Melle, who kept me from making this PhD project a too large part of my life, and who, each in their own way, encouraged me to complete it.
