

- Damion Bunders is a PhD candidate and member of the research group Institutions for Collective Action at Rotterdam School of Management. His research interests include technology, institutions, and collective action. In his PhD project, he investigates the challenges to resilience for cooperatives of gig workers.

- Agnes Akkerman is Professor of Regulation of Labour at AIAS-HIS, Amsterdam Law School, University of Amsterdam. Her research interests include industrial conflict, co-determination, and worker participation and voice; protest mobilization and repression. She has recently published her interdisciplinary research in the American Journal of Sociology, Political Psychology, Socio Economic Review, and Comparative Political Studies