Unlike the cover of this dissertation suggests, completing a PhD project is not a one-man show. Many people have helped me along the way.

First of all, my supervisors Carsten and Bernard. Working with you during the past four years has been a great experience. Thanks for giving me the freedom to take the project to new directions, while keeping the project focused. Carsten, thanks for sharing your excitement about research, and more importantly, about identifying important research questions. Your passion for science is contagious. Your office door was always open, and you always replied to my (sometimes late...) e-mails instantly. You were always there to help me see the big picture, and to keep track of the big picture even while designing the exact details of experiments and when writing papers. Bernard, thanks for keeping me sharp by bringing up additional theories, suggesting alternative methods, and competing hypotheses. When I believed a paper to be pretty much ready to be submitted, more than once you identified essential missing arguments or suggested a drastic change of structure. And you were always right. I could not have wished for a better pair of supervisors. Carsten and Bernard, thanks!

Then my colleagues. Many thanks to my great roommates at 10.01, 10.04, and 4.01 (or was it 4.02?), for discussing ideas, sharing (and fighting over) lab space, tips on dealing with students and supervisors. Daniël, it was great fun sharing an office, two supervisors, and many cool ideas and beers over the last four years. Thanks to all my colleagues at the Work and Organizational Psychology and Social Psychology departments at the University of Amsterdam, ASPO, the social cognition track at KLI, and thanks to my research collaborators, for four years of constructive feedback, moral support, and some crazy theme parties.

Special thanks go to Andy. Thanks for hosting me at the snow covered University of Rochester. I am very happy and thankful that you came to play such an important role in my PhD project. Thanks for your support, for thinking with me about the consequences of striving for approach and avoidance goals, for making me part of exciting projects, and for sharing your thoughts on what science should look like. I also want to thank all members of your lab, for welcoming me at your lab meetings, coaching me through the IRB maze, taking me on skiing trips, and introducing me to the local cuisine. Stephanie, thanks for sharing your office with me, my visit to Rochester would have been very different without you.
Mijn vrienden en familie, bedankt voor alle hulp, al dan niet gevraagd advies, kritiek, gezelligheid, en natuurlijk, liefde & aandacht. Bedankt voor jullie geduld met mijn verhalen over weer een experiment met een muis en een kaas dat een idee test dat ontzettend voor de hand lijkt te liggen (maar zie Hoofdstuk 5). Linda, jij in het bijzonder bedankt. Voor de gezelligheid, etentjes in de Bilt en daarbuiten, vakanties, schaatsen, trollen, het plannen van strategieën tijdens Kolonisten, de Efteling, boswandelingen, en nog veel meer. Wat had dat alles met mijn proefschrift te maken? Vaak helemaal niets, en dat was hard nodig! En natuurlijk Shaul. Bedankt voor al je steun, geduld, en hulp op en buiten het werk.

אני אוהב אותך!
