After having written most of the chapters (within this thesis) as papers for various journals, the opportunity to write this thesis came more as a chance and sudden opportunity for me than it was a longstanding burden to work on. Nonetheless especially in the final stage it took its toll on everyone around me. I am more than blessed to have a lovely family, friends and colleagues around me to support me during this stage. I hope that, now I have finished writing this thesis, I will be there for them in return as loving and understanding as they were.

First of all I want to thank Ian Lindsey and Chris Cunningham. You have taken me to be a pelvic floor fellow at your department of colorectal surgery at the John Radcliffe Hospital in Oxford after I finished my surgical residency. This is one of those times that every piece of the puzzle seems to fit. You have learned me so much! Not only surgical skills and understanding the complexity of functional colorectal surgery but especially you have showed me to think outside the box while maintaining a logical and clear state of mind. I remember the laughter and sometimes almost philosophical discussions during operations. Under your supervision the research I have been able to do came almost naturally although my experience with research was only very little. This year in Oxford was a perfect break for me and Klaar. I am grateful for every opportunity you were willing to give me. This thesis is in a way a symbol to thank you both.

Professor dr. Bemelman, dear Willem. After asking you to be my promotor you have welcomed me with open arms. You have definitely lowered the bar for me to proceed working on this thesis. Your ambition seems almost effortless and this has and will be of great inspiration for me.

Professor dr. Neil Mortensen. I am very proud to have worked with you as head of the department of colorectal surgery at the John Radcliffe Hospital. You represent an indisputable example for all registrars and fellows (and surgeons) with regards to your expertise and career in colorectal surgery. Nonetheless your gentle and mild character always seems to have prevailed. I am more than honoured that you are my co-promotor during the defence of this thesis.

Professor dr. Lange, dear Johan. When I was accepted a surgical residency in Rotterdam you were my supervising trainer at the Clara Hospital. I remember your great sense of humour, your intellect and broad interest in almost every topic. The discussions we have had were different and will be kept in memory to last. I am delighted that you are part of my promoting committee.
I would like to thank Professor dr. Smout, Professor dr. Broeders, dr. Roovers and dr. Buskens for critically reading the manuscript and being part of the promoting committee.

Erwin van der Harst, thank you for keeping believing in me as a surgeon to be. You have supported me as my supervising trainer in the final years of my residency. This period in time was clouded by uncertainty with respect to how to pursue my career after the residency. Lacking sufficient scientific experience was likely to be insurmountable for the next step to make. Thanks to you I was able to go to Oxford as a pelvic floor fellow and see what it brought me. I will always be very grateful that you were willing to make the effort and bring me this opportunity.

I want to thank all my co-authors and colleague registrars and fellows in Oxford. It has been a blast! I have felt to be part of the “Oxford family” as soon as I started the fellowship. Your typical English humour and great taste for music was a bonus which I enjoyed very much.

I especially want to thank Rowan Collinson. Rowan after I have taken over the pelvic floor fellowship from you it felt as if I was boarding a riding train. Thanks to your effort the year before the pelvic floor fellowship was obviously brought to the next level. Time spend with you in theatre, during lunch breaks and outside of work was always a joy.

Secondly I want to thank Oliver Jones. Oliver as a co-author of the latest published papers you were always the first to respond after reviewing them. Your thorough and accurate corrections and complements were of great value and I am certain that your effort has been critical for the acceptance of the papers.

Hans², Robert, Ruth and Bertus. In 2009 you have embraced me as your colleague surgeon in Woerden. Thanks to you I was able to prolong my pelvic floor expertise in Holland. Apart from that you have been supporting me during the last stage of writing this thesis. Although this might be considered as something obvious I certainly consider your support very special. Therefore I will always be thankful to you.

My parents. Mom and Dad, I love you very much. Your care and loving which I have taken for granted is felt sincerely at the same time. Your unbreakable moral support has given me the self-assurance which I needed to be where I am today and is very much appreciated.

Eline, Stijn and Teun, my three little ones. Thank you for being my comic relief. Your cheerfulness which seems inexhaustible is contagious. Thanks to you I leave home every day with a smile. And after returning you make the world seem to be a little paradise where there is no place for misfortune.
And finally Klaar. You have sacrificed the most. While being a wonderful and caring mother you have remained supportive and understanding to me not only now I am finishing the thesis but actually from the start since we have met. I have been blessed with your love for years. With your cheerfulness you make my life wonderful and let the sun shine. I hope we will be this great team until the end of time. You are the love of my life and I owe you one...
