Preface

23 April 2009. I am about to leave the Rotterdam tram after a field trip to Morocco. Three huge controllers look at me curiously. ‘You are carrying a lot, been on vacation?’ one of them asks. ‘No, to Morocco for my work’, I respond. One of the men reacts, ‘That’s far away!’ The other smiles, ‘That is also a vacation!’ The third one asks, ‘So what did you do over there?’ I answer, ‘A research about the cooperation between municipalities’. ‘Ha, ha, so nothing is happening, right?’ the first man reacts. ‘Actually a lot is happening!’ I respond. ‘Sure thing. Between those ‘chiefs’?’, one man asks. I smile and say, ‘They have ordinary mayors and city halls in Morocco’.

To some extent this anecdote is illustrative of the general perception of city-to-city cooperation and of the engrained images many people have of ‘developing countries’. I became interested in city-to-city cooperation through my work experience in Kenya, where I often felt that I could offer little to the farmers who were interested in Dutch agriculture. Later on as a policy advisor in the Netherlands I organized meetings for Dutch municipalities active in international relations and I was inspired to learn more about this form of cooperation. I would like to thank the many valuable colleagues who motivated me to develop my ideas further and embark on this PhD: Isa Baud, Johan Post, and Ton Dietz of the University of Amsterdam (UvA) and Paul van Lindert and Marike Bontenbal of the Utrecht University (UU).

Many practitioners have contributed to this research. I want to thank all respondents in Morocco, Turkey and the Netherlands for their time and information. In Turkey I extend a special ‘thank you’ to Jelle Verheij, Mehmed Dimeray, Alper Akin and Alper Toga. In Morocco Abdelaziz Madrane and Rifat Ballot were of great assistance for finding the right people and simply making my stays very pleasant. A special words of thanks also goes to Wouter Hazelhoff Roelfzema, Jan Hoogland and Cynthia Plette (NIMAR) who helped me with contacts and suggestions. In the Netherlands, Ronald van Gemeren, Najib Ouamar, Gilles Oudeman, Vincent Vleesenbeek, Marleen de Groot and Rien Botermans were very helpful.

Many thanks go to my promoter Prof. I.S.A. Baud of the Department of Geography, Planning and International Development Studies of the University of Amsterdam. Isa, I really enjoyed ‘our partnership’, I have learned a lot about theories, writing coherent articles and this dissertation. I appreciated your involvement in a conference and the evaluation of the LOGO South programme despite your overloaded work schedule. Johan Post has only been involved as a co-promoter in the first part of my research but his contribution was important for getting a good start. The first two years of the research (2007–2008) were co-funded by NCDO, the Dutch expertise and advisory centre for citizenship and international cooperation. I want to thank NCDO and especially Annelies Kanis (currently working at Kinderpostzegels) who put her trust in the project. I am fortunate to have joined NCDO as a senior researcher at the final stage of my PhD. I also thank Cordaid, and particularly Marloe Dresens for financing the pre-research phase. I extend my gratitude to VNG International—especially Peter Knip, Malinda Twaalfhaven, Neila Akrimi and Arne Musch—for providing me with access to the archives and conferences.

I am really grateful for the time and valuable feedback I received from Paolo De Mas (Morocco Institute in the Netherlands), Sylvia Bergh (Institute for Social Studies) and Ulas Bayraktar (Mersin University in Turkey) who thoroughly examined chapter 4 on the context. I also really appreciate the feedback I received from Hazel Johnson and Gordon Wilson (Open University, Milton Keynes, United Kingdom) and Ulrike Devers-Kanoglu. Many thanks also for Paul van Lindert, Gery Nijenhuis and Marieke Bontenbal from UU for all the exchanges, cooperation in evaluation research and research seminars. Nikola Stalevski did a great job in editing the dissertation, and provided helpful suggestions and insight beyond the editing tasks. Marcel Heemskerk of the UvA made the maps and Frank van Kesteren assisted with the lay out. Thanks a lot.

At the UvA I enjoyed the company of (former) fellow PhD researchers like Iris Monnereau, Anna Laven, Hebe Verrest, Mieke Lopes Cardozo, Benson Mulemi, Emmanuel Nyankweli, Mercy Derkyi, Inti Soeterik, Sanne van der Kaaij, Magali Chelpi, Tara van Dijk, Hulya Kosar Altinyelken, Serana Nasango, Marloes Kraan, Koen Kusters, Elma Folmer, Josje Hoekveld, Joeri Scholten, Neeraj Mishra and Tara Saharan. I also appreciated the cooperation with staff members, including Michaela Hordijk, Maarten Bavinck, Niels Beerepoot, Ad de Bruijne and Virginie Mamadouh. My gratitude also goes to the Chair of the Department of Geography, Planning and International Development Studies, Joos Droogleever Fortuijn. The supportive staff-members Gert van der Meer, Marianne van Heelsbergen, Guida Morais and Puikang Chan were also very helpful in this challenging PhD trajectory. I really appreciate the interest, support and understanding of my colleagues at NCDO, especially Peter Heintze and Gabi Spitz, in light of my overly optimistic estimates about the time needed to finalize the thesis!

In the last research period I did not have much time for social occasions with friends but I trust we can catch up, Wendy, Anna, Angèle, Monique, Erwin, Petra, Hein and Karen! Dear Wendy; nothing works better to recharge the battery than walking ‘long’ distances while chatting all day! And what would I have done without my ‘extended family’? They were simply there when I needed them. First of all many many thanks to my parents, Jacques and Nel and my brother Joost. Furthermore Jessica, Emma, Mees, Cor and Lies, Anna, Julia and Ruben; thanks for your good company and encouragements. A special thanks for my mother Nel and mother-in-law Lies who were there for Rosa and Jonas, and helped us keep a more or less tidy house.

The last words of gratitude are of course for Jeroen, Rosa and Jonas. Who else? It has been challenging to combine work, writing a dissertation and our private lives, but Jeroen always supported me to follow my heart. Especially in the last year they had to be very patient with me; I was glued to my laptop and had to miss vacations and family trips. ‘You already said a year ago that you were nearly finished!’ they all complained. Yes, you are completely right, but I promise I will join you guys for nice family outings now! I am so happy to have you three around me!
