I would like to thank all those people who in one way or another contributed to this dissertation. I am greatly indebted to Professor Michael Ellman, who provided me with the opportunity to do this dissertation, and who gave me the freedom to choose my own research topics, and to follow my own interests and ideas. I was greatly impressed by the speed and accuracy with which Michael always read and corrected my articles, he was very knowledgeable, patient, and encouraged me by simply asking how things were going with my dissertation. I could not have wished for a better supervisor. For that, I would like to thank him very much.

I would also like to thank the ASE Research Institute (former RESAM) of the Faculty of Economics and Business (former FEE) of the University of Amsterdam for financing this research project, and providing all kinds of useful facilities. I enjoyed following the Master of Philosophy in Economics programme of the Tinbergen Institute, and profited not only from the knowledge I acquired there, but also from the stimulating, and companionable environment of the Institute. I would like to thank the NWO for funding a large part of my research in Mongolia together with ASE, and I want to thank the National University of Mongolia (NUM), Mrs Erdenejargal, and in particular Professor Joerg Janzen, Director of the Center for Development Research at the NUM, in Ulaanbaatar for providing me with the opportunity to do research in Mongolia, and to teach methodology at the NUM during my visit in 2005. I, furthermore, want to thank Jos De Groot and Hanneke Brouwer of the Ministry of Economic Affairs for giving me the opportunity and extra days off to work on my dissertation, and always kindly inquiring how my dissertation was progressing, therewith encouraging me to continue with my dissertation until it was finally finished.

Two persons I want to thank in particular are Dr. Tony Chessa and Dr. Sanneke Schouwstra, with both of whom I wrote a chapter in this dissertation. Tony helped me to mathematically work out my ideas. I enjoyed working together with him, I enjoyed his enthusiasm and together we generated a lot of new ideas which we still have to work out. Sanneke, apart from being my highly valued and always supportive sister, is an excellent methodologist, who with her ingenuity and knowledge enabled me to do my research the way I wanted to do it. She can do in a few days where others would need weeks. I am glad she managed to find time to work on a chapter together with me, and I am very glad I have such a kind and wonderful sister.

I would like to thank Mrs. Patricia Ellman for correcting the English of almost all chapters of this thesis. She did an excellent job. All the mistakes you can still find in this dissertation are definitely my own. I am indebted as well to Azaa, Odno, Undra, and Hulan for translating everything from German to Mongolian, and from Mongolian to German, and helping me with my research in Ulaanbaatar. I want to thank the Mongolian students, who followed my course in Ulaanbaatar, for their part in my research. I want to thank Marco De Stefanis for designing the cover of my dissertation, and Gerard Staring of Staring Consult BV for providing contacts, inviting me to workshops, and introducing me to various well rehabilitation programmes in Mongolia. I want to thank Raoul for always being there when he was needed. Sometimes Raoul could not be reached for months on end, but when computers crashed, data systems would not cooperate, or mailboxes needed to be rescued he always answered the phone and would come over immediately to make it all work again! For that I want to thank him very much.

I want to thank all scholars who have given me information both in Mongolia and in Europe. I would like to thank Professor Van Weert and professor Meyboom, who both provided me with information on the Tempus TACIS project 'A curriculum change in medicine at the NUM', which I analysed in my second chapter. Both made time for me, answered my questions, sent me information, and reacted enthusiastically when I approached them again in 2012 to hear what the outcome was of their project after so many years. I also want to thank the scholars who kindly invited me to visit their alma mater and stimulated me with their enthusiasm, such as professor Feith and professor Van Genderen. I also want to thank Professor Henk Jager with whom I always had very interesting talks during lunchtime. I would like to thank all of them for their warm interest and their positive reactions.

I greatly enjoyed having discussions, lunches, dinners and other outings with my fellow PhD-students of the Tinbergen Institute Felix, Pedro, Rom, Ton and Hu. It was stimulating and interesting to share their company. At the University of Amsterdam I enjoyed the company of Edith, Ruta, Naomi, Tijmen, Eiko, Frank, Dirk, Bas, Massimo, Peter, Carla, Neeltje, Clarita and Jens. I want to thank all of them for giving me such a nice time at the university. I want to thank Marian of the Tinbergen Institute and Robert and Wilma of the University of Amsterdam for their support and always a friendly word and a smile. I, furthermore, want to thank Jeroen Geelhoed, who was a colleague of mine before I started on this dissertation, and with whom I had many interesting discussions. I also want to thank all my friends and colleagues who kindly inquired over the years how my dissertation was going and stimulated me to go on until it was finally finished. Thank you very much.

I dedicate this dissertation to professor Pluvier and professor Heesterman. Both were very knowledgeable, and stimulating. I enjoyed their lectures very much, as I enjoyed discussions with them. They knew how to get the best out of their students, and it has been a privilege to be a student of both of them. They have set an excellent example for their students. Their example deserves to be copied. I also dedicate this dissertation to my parents in gratitude for their love, continuous support, and encouragement. Even though one always accepts parental love and support as natural and automatic, actually it is very special that one can always fall back on these certainties. Thank you very much for that.

Last but not least, I would like to thank my children Kiki and Yse Schouwstra, for the joy they have given me, and their patience for all those times that their mom would withdraw to work on her dissertation while they wanted to do other things with me. And finally, I want to thank my very dear husband Robert, who not only gives me a lot of joy, but also took care of a large part of our household in order to enable me to work on my dissertation, who always stimulated me to go on, and who is possibly even more glad than I am that I finally managed to finish this dissertation. Without him it would have been a much more difficult task.
