This study is part of the Tracking Development project, which compared the contrasting economic development of four countries in Southeast Asia (Indonesia, Malaysia, Vietnam and Cambodia) with four countries in Sub-Saharan Africa (Nigeria, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda). The project, funded by Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs and coordinated by the Royal Netherlands Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies (KITLV) and Africa Studies Centre (ASC), Leiden, in collaboration with many institutions in each country, tried to find out why there are ‘Asian Tigers’ but no ‘African Lions’, why ‘Asian Miracles’ but ‘African Tragedy’. As the project crossed many countries and institutions, I am deeply indebted personally and professionally to many people, more than it is possible to mention.

I deeply appreciate Peter Boomgaard, my doctorate promotor, for providing support and constant encouragement, which eased this whole long journey of doing a PhD. Without him, my academic endeavours would not be the same. I am also greatly indebted to David Henley, my co-promotor as well as Regional Coordinator Southeast Asia and Country Coordinator Indonesia of the Tracking Development project, who played an important role throughout this study and provided help whenever I needed it. His persuasive and critical analysis helped me to shape this dissertation into what it is now. Thanks also to Henk Schulte Nordholt, Mario Rutten, Ton Dietz and Peter Lewis for being members of the promotie committee.

I am thankful to Riwanto Tirtosudarmo, my senior colleague at the Indonesian Institute of Sciences (LIPI), for his friendship as well as his encouraging, critical and insightful comments and advice. For my understanding of Nigeria I am greatly indebted to my Nigerian counterparts, Akiyinka Akinyoade (ASC, Leiden), David Enweremadu (Department of Political Science, University of Ibadan) and Antonia Taiye Simbine (Nigerian Institute of Social and Economic Research (NISER), Ibadan). Their comments, suggestions and insights about Nigeria, as well as their supportive roles during my fieldwork in Nigeria are highly appreciated.

During my involvement in the Tracking Development project, I am grateful to have met some wonderful people: Roel van der Veen, Bernard Berendsen, Jan Kees van Donge, Un Kheang, Joseph Fernando, Han ten Brummelhuis, Andre Leliveld, John Kleinen, David Booth, Othieno Nyajom and many others. I am particularly thankful to Ursula Oberst, who was always helpful with any practicalities during my study.

My greatest thanks go to Ibrahim Badamosi Babangida, Philip Asiodu, Ahmed Joda, Chu Okongwu, Onaolapo Soleyè, Kalu Idika Kalu, Anthony Ani, Jibril Aminu, Adamu Fika, Akpan H. Ekpo, Samuel Olofin, Gloria Joseph-Raji, Hauwa Imam, Arie van der Wiel, and all my informants who shared their stories, ideas and experience about Nigeria and Nigerian policy-making. I am also grateful to know David Nellor, International Monetary Fund country chief and resident representative Nigeria, not only for his valuable insights but also friendship during my study. In Indonesia I am really thankful to Widjojo Nitisastro, who helped me with important materials and contacts of his friends. My greatest thanks go to Ali Wardhana, Emil Salim, Subroto, Rahmat Saleh, Arifin Siregar, J.B. Sumarlin, Soedradjat Djiwandono, Abdoel Raoef Soehoed, Hartarto Sastrosoenarto, Marzuki Usman, Suhadi Mangkusuwondo, Hariry Hadi, Sri Hadi, Satrio Budiharjo Joedono, Fuad Bawazier, Ari Kuncoro, Dawam Rahardjo, Batara Simatupang, Pande Radja Silalahi and all my informants who were very generous in sharing their stories, ideas and experiences.

I greatly benefited from very significant comments and advice by Thomas Lindblad and Arie Kuyvenhoven. I am also indebted to Lili Yan Ing and Aufa Doarest for statistical data that are important for this study.

During my fieldwork in Indonesia, Thee Kian Wie helped me generously with supportive materials and provided contacts to many former economic policy-makers. Similarly, M. Bustom, Naomi Tri Yuliani, Gangsar, Hikmat Hardono Chozin and Farid Arif Wibowo helped me a lot in gaining access to my main respondents in Jakarta. In Nigeria I would have felt lonely without the Indonesian Community in Nigeria (ICON) and the ‘big family’ at the Indonesian Embassy in Nigeria. I particularly thank the families of Henri Samosir, Reza Abdoelrojak, Nilton Amaral, Christian Pangaribuan, Wolter, Markiman, Ali Rahman, Budi Santoso, Agus Sutandar, Eka Budi Dja(11)nika and Eneng for their help and hospitality during my fieldwork in Abuja. I am also very thankful to Valentine Ntui, Buki and Olusegun Adekoya for their help and friendship during my stay in Ibadan.

During the writing period, I greatly benefited from the fellowship of the Center for Southeast Asian Studies (CSEAS), Kyoto University, Japan. I am particularly thankful to Kosuke Mizuno, Masaaki Okamoto, and Hiromu Shimizu, for their help and hospitality during my stay at the center. When I was writing my research proposal for this project in Canberra, Australia, I was given advice, support and help by the families of Kacung Maridjan and Arif Zamhari.

My fellow PhD students at the Tracking Development project, Un Leang, Adewale Aderemi, Blandina Kilama, Bethuel Kinuthia, Tran Quang Anh, Wan Fairuz Wan Chik and Frank Mwebaze, are not only friends with whom I shared ideas about development on two continents, but their companionship made my PhD life more colourful. During my stay in Amsterdam, I was also very fortunate to meet some interesting PhD students at Amsterdam Institute of Social Science Research (AISSR), namely Athi Sivan Mariappan, Marten Boekelo, Frank van As, Ana Miskovska Kajevska, Marieke van Eijk, Marcel van den Haak, Eline van Haastrecht, Anick Vollebergh, Alexander Voicu, Gerben Korthouver, and Marloes van Westrienen. I am also indebted to some nice and helpful people at the AISSR secretariat: Jose Komen, Hermance Mettrop, Roos de Jager, Yomi van der Veen, Emilie van Tol, Joanne Oakes, Michiel Baas, Philip Romer, Anneke Dammers and Miriam May.

Indonesian friends in the Netherlands made my PhD life less lonely, therefore I am deeply thankful to: Went(11)y Marina Minza, Amalinda Savirani, Alpha Amirrachman, Dara Rosmailina, Meta Aurelia, Enade Istya(11)sto, Debby Imelda, Irwan Hidayana, Deasy Simanjuntak, Muhammad Najib Azca, Dyah, Hana, Lia

I am deeply thankful to Yekti Maunati, Erwiza Erman, Dundin Zaenudin, Dini Saptari, Hasni, Made Subaliati, Lamijo and the other staff members of the Research Center for Regional Resources (PSDR) LIPI for their help, support and encouragement. I am particularly thankful to Prima Nurahmi Mulyasari for assisting with the transcriptions of the interviews.

A special thanks to Sanneke Kloppenburg for her friendship and her willingness to help me at the final stage of my study and with the Dutch translation of my research summary. I am also thankful to Mohamad Shohibuddin, who helped me a lot during the finishing stage of my study. I am greatly indebted to Rita DeCoursey, English language editor, for carefully reading, correcting and refining this manuscript.

I am deeply thankful to my parents, Soebekti and Hani’ Atien, my brothers and all the members of my extended family in Tuban, for their endless love, prayer and support. Also, thanks to my mother-in-law, Supeni, and family in Jogjakarta, for their prayer and support, particularly in taking care of Sekar when her parents were abroad. Finally, I would like to thank my wife, Kurniawati Hastuti Dewi, and my daughter, Aksari Sekar Fuady, for their love, understanding and sacrifice during the process of this study.

Alhamdulillahi rabbil ‘alamien.
