Acknowledgements

In conducting and writing up this dissertation, I have benefitted highly from my supervisors as well as many friends and colleagues. First and foremost, Ruud Koopmans deserves my deepest gratitude. Ruud was highly committed in this project and I owe many of its key twists to him. Ruud is also a tenacious and demanding supervisor. From him I learned to try going the extra mile(s) and to face serious objections. I enjoy working with Ruud, because he is innovative and unorthodox both as a researcher and as a person. I also wish to thank Wouter van der Brug for supporting my dissertation at the Universiteit van Amsterdam and particularly for his well-dosed comments during the crucial phase of finishing up the thesis.

Following Pepper (1966), I shall not forget that I only got by with a little help from my friends. I am very grateful for having such great colleagues at the department “Migration, Integration, Transnationalization” at the Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin für Sozialforschung. I thank Anna Dunkel, Evelyn Ersanilli, Fenella Fleischmann, Susanne Grasow, Marc Helbling, Jutta Höhne, Bram Lancee, Larissa List, Elisa Menier, Ines Michalowski, Elmar Schlueter and Celine Teney for keeping their office doors open. In particular, I thank Sarah Carol for nutrition, Susanne Veit for sharing our loud thoughts and an office for three years, as well as Mareike Wagner and Jonas Wiedner’s for support in collecting, transforming and merging huge data-messes to generate what now is the EDCA-Survey.

I could always count on Arno Simons and Joscha Legewie to discuss ideas, theories, methods, or a draft paper since the very first day of our bachelor studies. I am grateful that this will not change any time soon. What would have happened if I had not been treated with the CO:STA-Team, Martin Ehlert and Christian Rauh, as well as Jan Paul Heisig? A boring counter-factual to think of. Thanks to the WZB’s shared copy machines, I met Kenneth Newton and thereafter also Robert Putnam and Matthew Wright, all of whom I owe valuable comments. Thanks also to Michael Banton, Robert Braun, Mika Hyötyläinen, Marc Keuschnigg, Claudia Simons, Oliver Strijbis and Andreas Wimmer for their thoughtful criticism. And without a doubt I am grateful to all my friends and colleagues who were there when needed.

Of course, I also want to thank the members of the reading committee, Claudia Diehl, Tom van der Meer, John Mollenkopf, Jean Tillie and Herman van de Werfhorst for their time and effort.

Last but not least, I wish to thank my patch-work family. Doris Schaeffer and Klaus Hurrelmann have supported me all the way with advice and Sunday-meals. Emanuel Schaeffer regularly popped up on google chat when it was time for procrastination and encouragement.
