Acknowledgements

This dissertation and the research it is based on would not have been possible without the contributions and support – academically or otherwise – of many people. Most important of all, I would like to thank my respondents for trusting me with their stories. Your voices made this research come to life, and in addition you have enriched mine. I am very grateful and I hope I have done you justice.

Starting from the beginning of what seemed at times a very non-linear journey, I would like to thank Sabine Luning of Leiden University and Maykel Verkuyten of Utrecht University for inspiring me to pursue a PhD in the first place. The late Ronald van Kempen helped to get the ball rolling by suggesting my name to Sako Musterd and Fenne Pinkster. The support, guidance, and constructive criticism of Sako and Fenne have been invaluable to this enterprise. As my promotor, Sako gave me the opportunity to embark on this journey. I very much appreciate his continued support and confidence in my work. Our conversations on policy context and the world at large have been both helpful and enjoyable. Fenne as my co-promotor has been an enthusiastic and encouraging presence. Fenne, I greatly admire your critical stance and love for geographical research. Thank you for holding my work to high standards and for encouraging me to take some time off.

I have been lucky to work with some great people within the ICEC team. In particular, I would like to thank Julia Dahlvik, Yvonne Franz, Josef Kohlbacher, and Daniel Rauhut, with whom I have had the opportunity to co-write and/or present. Julia, I am very happy that our paper is part of this dissertation! Thanks also go to Hester Booi and Jeroen Slot at OIS Amsterdam for their critical comments on my findings. Furthermore, the data collection has been made easier by the assistance of Gerald Brugman, Marijn Ferier, Rosa de Jong, and Annefleur Noom, who conducted part of the interviews, and by Jules Klinkhamer, Rachid Mouktadibillah, Brigitte van de Pas, and Inger Valks, who helped with the transcription.

Many colleagues at the University of Amsterdam have contributed to this dissertation in one way or another, whether through in-depth discussions or simply by providing a nice social atmosphere. I will not begin to name everybody, but thanks go in particular to past and present roommates Rowan Arundel, Oana Druta, Robbin Jan van Duijne, Sabine van der Gref, Cody Hochstenbach, Jannes van Loon, Floris van Slijpe, and Jing Zhou, to Els Veldhuizen and Sjoerd de Vos for giving me the opportunity to teach together, to Willem Boterman and Wouter van Gent for the same and for lunchtime exercise, to Marco Bontje for giving me the opportunity to delve into a new project, and to Puikang Chan and Barbara Lawa for demystifying administrative procedures. Outside academia, I would like to thank my family and friends who never tired of asking me when I would be finished (or delicately avoided the topic). You know who you are. My father was kind enough to edit the manuscript, making him one of the select few who have read the whole thing. My mother has the special superpower of always reading my mood by the tone of my voice, and usually manages to cheer me up. Special thanks go to my sister Iris, who often reminds me of the beauty of language. Finally, these past years would not have been as much fun without Daniël. Thank you for your love and for everything else. I feel most at home with you.
