Writing this dissertation has been a wonderful experience. Tough at times but just as often great fun and always very rewarding. I can not imagine that it would have been nearly as enjoyable or even possible without the people around me. A central role was played by Joep. For a start he convinced me to start the Tinbergen master program which was every bit as dreadful as, but more useful than, I feared and definitely worth its rewards. Thanks Fujin, Hulusi, Liv, Markus, Marcelo, Marloes, Matija, Petr, Robert, Thomas and Zoltan for your support and companionship during these years.

Joep's more important role started after my graduation from TI when he became my supervisor. He taught me how to develop spontaneous ideas into research projects, how to fine-tune experimental designs and how to write honest yet publishable papers. Equally important however was the example he set as both an excellent researcher and a great person.

My gratitude also goes to all the other people at CREED who made our corridor a great place to work. Ailko, Aljaz, Arthur, Ben, Eva, Frans, Gönül, Jos, Julian, Karin, Klaus, Marcelo, Matthijs, Michal, Pedro, Roel, Theo, and Yang thank you for making CREED the excellent research and learning environment that it is. Adrian and Thomas, my office mates, co-authors and friends deserve special mention. Thank you for your great ideas and for challenging mine. My thanks also goes out to many other people in the Amsterdam School of Economics who have inspired me or helped me in other ways. Especially to Jan for his contributions to chapter 4 of this dissertation.

I was lucky enough to not only have great co-workers, but great friends as well. Duco and Gijs thank you for all the fun times and for making sure I also have nerdy and intellectual discussions that do not revolve around economics. Further thanks to clan Bonaparte for enlivening my (extended) student years and for sharpening my mind. Jana and Stephanie, things might not have worked out as we had hoped, but nevertheless thank you for your support in times of need.

Last but not least I want to thank my mothers for their unconditional love, endless support and wise advice.
