ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing this thesis has been both an academic and a personal voyage of discovery. Foremost among the things I have found out about myself is that I am a private person, even when it comes to my research: I would rather not let anyone see it. In this sense, it is a miracle that this thesis lies before you today. This character trait did not always allow me to take full advantage of all the kind offers of help I have received over the years, for which I beg forgiveness. I sincerely hope that these offers still stand, and that I will be able to make use of them in the next years.

My supervisor, Lex Bosman, has supported and encouraged me from the very start of this journey. I am thankful that he gave me the freedom to explore my own ideas, but also for his critical remarks and questions when I needed them. Profound thanks are also due to Sible de Blaauw, Judson Emerick, Guy Geltner, Bram Kempers, Koen Ottenheym and Wendelien van Welie, some of whom have also provided support along the way, for agreeing to be on the doctoral committee and being the first critical readers of this work.

This dissertation would not have been possible without the financial support of the Institute of Culture and History at the University of Amsterdam or without the practical aid of all of those who have supported my research by granting me access to buildings and archives, allowing me to read articles in advance of publication or sending me books. Many colleagues and students at the Art Historical Institute of this university made the work a great deal more enjoyable. Most notably among them was Jitske Jasperse. She has been an amazing companion on this journey, and the dissertation would have been far worse than it is today without our daily debates, laughter and humus. Others who deserve special mention are Miranda Bloem, Sanne Frequin, Marijke Rikken and Wouter Wagemakers.

Many have offered advice or encouragement at any stage of the project, or have played an important role in shaping my thoughts about the subject. I would like to thank in particular Jos Biemans, Dick de Boer, Dorine van Espelo, Caroline Goodson, Erik Goosmann, Marjolein van Herten, Henrik Hövelmann, Marijn de Jong, Mayke de Jong, Sanne Klaver, Rutger Kramer, Martine Meuwese, Ruxandra Marinesci, Lidia Negoi, Maarten Prot, Janneke Raaijmakers, Carine van Rhijn, Els
Lastly, I am greatly indebted to my family. I would like to express my thanks to my parents, Karin and Leon, for supporting my academic explorations even if the reasons I chose such an obscure subject were beyond them. My sister Ingeborg has meticulously proofread most of the texts in this book and has been a great support. Finally, I thank Fred for trying to keep me sane throughout all this.
