ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I feel very fortunate to have received support from such a wide range of people in writing this dissertation. Without the inspiring discussions and feedback from academic colleagues, the thoughtful input of so many interviewees and respondents, enthusiastic conversations with practitioners, and the continued support from friends and family, this dissertation could never have become what it is today.

First of all I would like to thank my supervisors, Deanne Den Hartog and Anne Keegan, for their continued support, open attitude towards new ideas, targeted feedback, and for being wonderful colleagues. I would also like to thank Rodney Turner, Mary Uhl-Bien, Wendelien van Eerde, Alan Muller, and Brendan O'Dwyer as my committee members for taking the time to read and respond to the whole dissertation.

I would like to thank Mary Uhl-Bien for introducing me to complexity leadership theory, and hearing what I had to say when I was using a different language. Thanks for your contagious enthusiasm and all the great discussions. Thanks for introducing me to Stephen Hayes, and Stephen, thanks for welcoming me in the ICCPM network.

I would also like to thank my colleagues at the University of Amsterdam Business School, Karianne Kalshoven, Hella Sylva, Nesrien Abu Ghazaleh, Renske van Geffen, Inge Wolsink, Rabiah Muhammad, Wendelien van Eerde, Stefan Mol, Corine Boon, Frank Belschak, Maarten de Haas, Nuria Ruigrok, Okke Postmus, Pawan Bhansing, Bram Kuijken, Marlene Vock, Hung Yao Liu, Anouar El Haji, Monika Kackovic, Meg Lee, René Bohnsack, Frederick Situmeang, Joris Ebbers, Jonatan Pinkse, Roel Boomsma, Flore Bridoux, Alan Muller and all other colleagues who made life at the office that much better. I would especially like to thank Karianne for her advice throughout every part of my PhD process.

Even before I started my PhD I was introduced to pHResh, the network for PhD students in HRM and OB. I've enjoyed getting to know a lot of people in similar situations, and getting lots of advice in and around the meetings. I've especially enjoyed organizing the HRM Network Pre-conference with Hella and Nesrien, being in the board of pHREsh with Hans van Dijk and Tugba Polat and organizing the EAWOP pre-conference with my fellow board members and Sjr Uitdewilligen, and meeting Xander Lub at every conference.

I've also received support from other networks I have been active in over the last years, such as the Network of Leadership Scholars, Platform Onderzoek Projectmanagement, and more recently the Dutch National Research Group in project management. Throughout the process of writing my PhD I have been very fortunate to have received enthusiastic research support from Vreni Meierink, Marlies van Foeken, Louelle Bosman and Hannah Berkers. I would like to thank Sjr Uitdewilligen, Juliet Aiken, Sonia Ospina, Joep Cornelissen, Darja Carl, and Ian Sutherland for their friendly reviews of my work. Chantal Savelsbergh, Peter Storm and Henk Broekema, thanks for being wonderful colleagues and helping me look beyond my dissertation in our joint research on the development of project managers.

My involvement in the practitioner community has helped me a great deal in testing my ideas and finding people willing to help me on my PhD journey. From the moment I started working on this PhD, the project management practitioner community has been very welcoming to me. The special issue in Projectie I was invited to write with Ernst Molier, André Kik and Constant Gras was a great introduction into the practical world of project management. The members of the IPMA Young Crew, and especially Bart Omlo, Maarten Bus, Martien Lathouwers, Ralph Keulen, and Malou van der Pal have truly supported my research. Other people that have helped me significantly in my research are Gerard Scheffrahn, Marc Vieleers, Peter Wijngaard, Robert van Alen, and Jan Blaakmeer.

A special thanks to my family and friends. Mum, dad, Jochem, Joris, Marijke, Karlijn, Isabel, Guus, Elwin, Yoram, Gerard, Anna-Rose, Frank, Cilie; thank you all so much for continuing to listen to my enthusiastic and frustrated PhD stories, giving me feedback on my work, and all the fun we had during this whole period.

And last but not least I would like to thank Frank for your continuous support, sharing my excitement, lifting my spirits when faced with setbacks, and putting things in perspective whenever my dissertation threatened to become all consuming.

I'm excited you have the end result in your hands right now, and am looking forward to the new adventures that lie ahead.
