After a four-year study in Amsterdam, it is an exciting moment to complete my PhD, which gives me a great sense of achievement. Hereby I wish to express my deepest gratitude to my supervisors, colleagues, friends and family. Without the support and help from various people, I would not have been able to complete this thesis. First and foremost I would like to thank the Chinese Scholarship Council and the University of Amsterdam for their financial support of my PhD research project.

I am deeply appreciative of the support of my promoter Prof. Karsten Kalbitz and co-promoter Dr. Erik Cammeraat. We had numerous discussions on our experimental results (in particular those obtained during the rainfall simulation experiments) and I got plenty of helpful and constructive suggestions and feedback to improve my work. Without their guidance and support from the experimental design to the writing of the manuscripts, I would have not been able to finish the thesis. I really appreciate what they have done for me during these past four years. Thank you very much for your patient and encouragement in each step toward my PhD.

I would also like to thank my colleagues in the Earth Surface Science group of the Institute for Biodiversity and Ecosystem Dynamics who contributed in very diverse ways to my research. Thank Chiara Cerli for her helpful advice during the writing of my manuscripts and her involvement in the laboratory experiments, in particular in soil density fractionation experiments and lignin measurements. I kindly acknowledge our group’s lab technicians Leo Hoitinga, Leen de Lange, Joke Westerveld, Bert de Leeuw, and Richard van Heck for their technical supports in the laboratory. For the rainfall simulation experiments, I wish to thank Caridad Diaz López, Bianca Pricope, Gillian Kopittke, Sebastiaan de Vet for their kind help in the pouring rain to collect soil and runoff samples. Furthermore, I would like to express special thanks to Paul Romeijn, not only for the soil sampling and laboratory analyses but also for his efforts in developing the experimental setup of our rainfall experiments. I kindly thank Remco Vis and Rashmi Charissa Bhagirath for their contributions to parts of the thesis. In addition, John Parsons, Gillian Kopittke and Jamie McLaren are acknowledged for their patience and feedback which they generously provided to improve my manuscripts. Erik Cammeraat and Frédérique Kirkels are acknowledged for the summary translation.

Furthermore, I would like to thank Prof. Gerard Govers and Zhengang Wang from the University of Leuven for their involvement and support in the field soil sampling campaigns of the Belgian Loess Belt. The experimental station ‘Proefboerderij Wijnandsrade’ is acknowledged for the permission of granting access to their land to obtain soil samples from their cereal fields for my research.

Next I would like to thank Prof. Jianbin Zhou for his encouragement and guidance in taking the first steps of my scientific career by starting this PhD.

I would like to thank Meike Sauerwein, Jens Altmann, Alex Hanke, and Thimo Johannes Klotzbücher for their help and stimulating discussions. I would also like to express my thanks to all of my Chinese friends who were particularly important during my stay as a PhD candidate at the University of Amsterdam. Bo Yan, Guowen Dai, Yang Song, Zepeng Sun, Congsen Meng, Jing Zhao, Liying Zhang, Fangyong Tang, Hairong Li, Qiang Yang, Xirong Li, Jian Fu, Huiqi Yan, Jing Zhou, Xu Zhang, Dan Li, Zhijie Wang, Zhen Wei, Zhongyu Lou, Yang Liu, Hao Zhu, Wei Quan, Yedan Li, Qianqian Zhang, Jie Liu, Que Chen, Xiaotang Di, Yanfang Feng, Zhongcheng Pan, Quanxing Liu, Li Qiu, Ling Zhang, Yadong Xu, and many others. In addition, my former flat mates Azmat Ullah Khan, Bui Quoc Chinh, Zhenhao Li, Marcel Schilling, Muhe Diao, Jiajia Gao are gratefully acknowledged. Thank you for contributing so much to the pleasure of our stay in Amsterdam. If I miss to mention someone here, you know who you are and my thanks also go to you.

Last but not least, thanks my parents and my wife. Thanks a million for your continuous love and support. You have always been there to support me.
