‘The honourable gentleman should make up his mind’ : strategic manoeuvring with accusations of inconsistency in Prime Minister’s Question Time

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

To Peter Houtlosser, who supervised my PhD research with utmost generosity, until his untimely death, I am thankful. Nothing has stimulated my thoughts like Peter’s intellectual enthusiasm or refined my ideas like his persistently critical attitude. His memory was often my drive to write the chapters of this manuscript. Peter, I am grateful.

I am also very thankful to my supervisors, Frans van Eemeren, Francisca Snoeck Henkemans and Erik Krabbe, for their critical guidance and support. Throughout the different stages of my PhD research, their critical feedback kept challenging me to clarify my thoughts and to defend my claims, and their personal concern encouraged me to develop my ideas and to amend my proposals.

I would like to thank my fellow participants in the research colloquium of the department of Speech Communication, Argumentation Theory and Rhetoric, at the University of Amsterdam. The research they presented at the colloquium, as well as the questions and remarks they raised when I presented my own research have been a great source of inspiration for me. Special thanks to Jan Albert van Laar. Our several talks about theoretical tools and concepts have considerably influenced my work. I am also thankful to David Zarefsky. The challenges he raised when commenting on an earlier version of my work have guided a good deal of my investigations.

I would also like to thank Corina Andone and Bilal Amjarso whose friendship has made light and enjoyable the long and often argumentative PhD office hours. I thank Makis, Marija, Jelmer, Henrike, Constanza, Walid, Dora and Merel for the moments of comfort and inspiration their friendship has provided. I am especially thankful to Marcin for being close and caring.

To Abdellatif, Thuraya and Riham my gratitude and love. I remain motivated by their gratification and concern.
