The journey that ends with completing this thesis began eight years ago, when I was granted the opportunity to re-engage with the field of anthropology. I started the research that informs this thesis in the context of a Master at the Free University (VU). Fortunately, I was able to continue my research at the stimulating environment of the International Institute for the Study of Islam in the Modern World (ISIM), under the supervision of Prof. Dr. Annelies Moors. When ISIM was closed, I relocated at the Amsterdam Institute of Social Science Research (AISSR), first working with FORUM, Institute for Multicultural Affairs, and later on, while writing this dissertation, with the support of the AISSR. I am enormously grateful for all these opportunities, and in particular to Professor Moors for her invaluable advice, encouragement, and support. Dr. Gerd Baumann's inspiring research on multiculturalism, his Methodology Clinic, and his interest in my research, have been of great importance, too. His passing away has saddened many; he will be missed. To all my (former) colleagues and academic friends at the VU, ISIM and the AISSR: thank you so much, I have enormously enjoyed your intellectual company.

During my research and while writing this thesis, I also worked at the Amsterdam (Historical) Museum. I thank the current Director Mr. Paul Spies and the former Director Mrs. Pauline Kruseman for allowing me to take up, and continue my research. I thank all my colleagues for their moral support. In particular, I thank Dr. Lodewijk Wagenaar for his encouragement to re-engage with academia. To all my colleagues at the Secretariat, in particular Yvonne Holdorp: thank you so much for your continuing interest and support.

I also profoundly thank my parents and grandmothers. Their belief in my ability to complete this journey was of great importance. I love you all very much. A special word of gratitude goes to my friend Zakia Boucetta. Her unwavering belief in my ability to make this endeavor a success has been a driving force. I also sincerely thank my friend Robert Hammel for his invaluable help with the English language. To all participants in my research, I extend a heartfelt thank you for letting me into your lives and telling me about your choice for Islam. Your enthusiasm and confidence were a great stimulus to continue my research. From the heart, I thank my husband Benyounes Najem, for his patience, intellectual engagement, and critical ear. A final word to all I cannot name here, thank you all for your company. Without you, it would have been a lonely journey.
