Finally, I dedicate this dissertation to Guus and my parents.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to thank my supervisors, Wouter van der Brug, Meindert Fennema and Sarah de Lange. Over the course of this project, all three of you have taught me many valuable lessons for which I owe you a great debt of gratitude. It was a pleasure to work with you.

I further wish to acknowledge the help I received from several research assistants. In particular, I would like to thank Rosanne Goderie. Rosanne, you made a great contribution to this work and I have fond memories of our collaboration.

In addition, I have been very lucky to have had so many inspiring and friendly colleagues around. To name a few: Bram Creusen, Erika van Elsas, Eelco Harteveld, Elmar Jansen, Madeleine Moret, Benno Netelenbos, Matthijs Rooduijn, Eefje Steenvoorden, Annemarie Walter and Marc van de Wardt. I also want to thank my colleagues for their careful criticism and generous support that have been essential to the completion of this study. In this respect, I specifically thank Loes Aaldering and Daphne van der Pas. And I should not omit Basje Bender. Basje, my fellow AISSR PhD-representative, sharing tasks with you was a delight.

Special thanks to Jules Croiset. Jules, you are a wonderful tutor with the exceptional ability to make Z-scores enjoyable. I also thank Maurice Bun, who kindly found the time to teach a political scientist a thing or two about econometrics. I would further like to thank Rens Vliegenthart for taking a look at some initial analyses. Your help is much appreciated. In addition, I thank Amal Chatterjee for his editorial comments on the manuscript.

I would also like to extend my sincere gratitude to the program group Challenges to Democratic Representation. In particular, I would like to thank Jean Tillie, Floris Vermeulen and Joris de Vries.

I must not forget Leila Abouyaala. Leila, you have been an enormous support throughout the entire venture. I've been fortunate to work with you.

I'm further very grateful that I can bring this project to an end with
