The first person I would like to thank has to be my supervisor Martijn Hesselink. Without him I would neither have started nor finished my PhD thesis. Martijn, you were a Doktorvater to me in every sense of the word. You always expressed your confidence in me, something from which I derived immense confidence myself. Sharp and critical, but encouraging at the same time and leaving me the freedom to pursue the project the way I saw fit. Some of the most intellectually satisfying moments of my time as a PhD candidate were the times we would go for coffee and just talk philosophy. I always left those conversations with so much energy and excitement.

The perfect complement to Martijn as Doktorvater was my Doktormutter and co-supervisor: Chantal Mak. Always there, always willing to listen, always supportive. Chantal, thank you for your contribution to the thesis itself and my academic life beyond the thesis, but most of all thank you for always being kind and understanding.

After thanking my academic parents, it seems fitting to thank my actual parents. Your unwavering support gave me the assurance that I can just be myself, which is not always obvious. I cannot thank you enough, my dear Henk, Els and Menno, for always believing in me.

As if having three parents was not fortunate enough, I have also had the incredible luck to have an extended family of amazing people. Helma, Fred, Lisa (even though you are no longer with us) and Tim, although we are not technically related, thank you for being such an important part of my family and support system. Exactly the same goes for Gerard, Annemieke, Jet and Charlie.

My extended family in the academic world has been the CSECL. It has been great to be part of such a stimulating institute. Not only did it provide a forum for critical discussion, both of my own work and that of others, but the CSECL also enabled numerous academically enviable opportunities, undoubtedly the most important of which has been my time as a visiting researcher at Harvard Law School. I would like to thank the faculty members there for taking the time to discuss my work. Especially professor Duncan Kennedy, who supervised my stay, and professor Steven Shavell deserve my gratitude for their engagement with and critical reflection on my work. Beside the faculty, Harvard exposed me to an incredible group of fellow students, many of whom are now close friends. Thank you for simultaneously being an inspiration and a pleasant distraction.

But of course the CSECL, and more broadly the law faculty at the UvA, has been great because of the people that it consists of. So thanks especially to all the junior researchers that I have met through the CSECL: Olga, Beatrijs, Aart, Guido, Marija, Lyn, Sascha, Joasia, Jaap, Selma, Dewi and Bas, you all have made my PhD project much more pleasant and interesting. I would also like to thank the members of the Secretariaat Privaatrecht for their assistance and Heather Kurzbauer for her editorial work. Outside of the department, a word of thanks goes to Nik and especially Dirk, my fellow Ars Aequi editors who also found refuge as PhDs at the UvA. Nik, thank you for the always stimulating discussions and lunches we shared. And Dirk, thank you for the countless rondjes we walked in which we could bounce any idea off each other. I don’t think by now there is anybody who knows the surroundings of the faculty better than we do.

During the writing of a PhD thesis you come to rely on your office roommates probably more than anybody else. So I was particularly lucky that after my stay in the U.S., I got to share an office with Bram and Candida. Bram, finishing a thesis at the same time while sharing an office creates a special bond. How nice that we get to defend our theses exactly one week from each other! Candida, thank you for always being interested and interesting, and for always being available to analyse just about anything. I cannot picture my time as a PhD candidate without all the post-work drinks we shared at the Gasthuys. And of course, not unimportantly, thank you for being one of my paranimfen.

Who the other paranimf would be was probably the easiest decision of my entire time as a PhD candidate. Of course it was going to be Jan, my best friend for as long as I can remember. Thank you for being there for me on every level, giving advice, talking, sharing, simply doing and being everything you want in a friend.

Also a special word of thanks to Liza, and the love and support you have given me during the final stages of my PhD. While the last year of writing a PhD thesis can be particularly stressful, you always managed to calm me down and make me feel I was exactly where I wanted to be.

Finally, there is one group of friends that deserves special mentioning: de helden. Alex, Bas, Cyriel, Jeroen, Jeroen, Joost, Jorn and Mathijs, you all have made the past years a hundred times more fun. It is a small miracle that, despite all of your best efforts, I managed to actually finish my thesis. Besides them, I would like to thank all my other friends at the Poort for the countless coffee breaks, which made even the difficult days that much more enjoyable.
