Big
Thanks

Committee members, for your time and patience.

Peter Sloot, for supporting my candidacy.

Jaap, for having provided a home for this thesis, as well as its legs, for being open minded, and for supporting your students in whatever way you could.

Marten Postma for your support, creative ideas, critical thinking and solidarity.

Mark Martindale, Heather Marlow and Craig Magie, for having received me at the glorious Kewalo Marine Laboratory, and for having been so generous with your lab and your friendship.

Murray Batchelor and Bob Burne, for letting me tag along on your field trip through Western Australia, and for all the wonderful things I saw there.

Jorge Carneiro for your inspiration and receiving me with open arms at the wonderful Instituto Gulbenkian de Ciência, three years in a row.

The Fundação para a Ciência e a Tecnologia and the European Union, for having made it all possible, for me, and a generation of Portuguese scientists.

Thomas Rauber, Flávio Varejão of the Universidade Federal do Espírito Santo, for their hospitality and office space during my extended stay at the University.

José “Tio Geo” Geraldo Guimarães, for the rice, beans, chicken and occasional pastry that fueled much of this thesis.

To my friends and colleagues, Alfredo, Carolina, Chinh, Daniel, David, Emiliano, Eric L, Erik H, Fajran, Gokhan, Jordi, Joris, Lampros, Lotte, Max, Narges J, Narges Z, Nol, Paula, Qiu, Rick, Shiqing Lin, Thomas, Yves, for sharing the burden and lightening the load.

Etienne, Fabio, John and Pedro, for the good times, the wit, the talking, the cooking, the drinking, the playing, the laughing, the biking, the euphoria, the excitement and your friendship.

My mother, Delfina, my father, Geoffrey, my sisters, Amy and Sara, and my brother Phillip, for making me who I am.

My in-laws, Selma, Francisco, Ana Carolina and Pedro, for your warmth and for taking me in.

To Catarina, for loving me.
