European Union. European Commission: Communications on intellectual property rights enforcement

Ó Fathaigh, R.

Published in: IRIS

Citation for published version (APA):

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: https://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

UvA-DARE is a service provided by the library of the University of Amsterdam (http://dare.uva.nl)
European Commission: Communications on intellectual property rights enforcement

The first Communication, entitled “A balanced IP enforcement system responding to today’s societal challenges”, describes a package of measures to further improve the application and enforcement of intellectual property rights within EU Member States, at EU borders, and internationally. In this regard, the Communication is divided into four main sections: the first concerns measures to make it easier for IP stakeholders to benefit from a homogeneous, fair and effective judicial enforcement system in the EU, and includes actions and recommendations to further enhance judicial capacity and predictability in the EU. These measures include the Commission providing a new Guidance (described below) on the interpretation and application of the measures, procedures and remedies provided for by the Enforcement Directive. Furthermore, the Commission calls on Member States to encourage the specialisation of judges in IP- and IP-enforcement-related matters, and to systematically publish judgments rendered in IP enforcement case. The second set of measures concerns support for industry-led initiatives to combat IP infringements, such as voluntary agreements with intermediaries, including the conclusion of a new memorandum of understanding aimed at withholding advertising on IP infringing websites. The third and fourth measures concern enhanced administrative cooperation between authorities in different Member States, and how the Commission seeks to combat IP infringements on a global scale by promoting best practices and stepping up cooperation with third countries.

The second Communication is a new (32-page) Guidance to clarify provisions of the Enforcement Directive. The Commission notes that since the Directive provides for minimum harmonisation, there is no uniform interpretation of the Directive’s provisions. Thus, the Guidance seeks to facilitate the Directive’s interpretation and application by competent judicial authorities and other parties involved in the enforcement of intellectual property rights (“IPR”) in proceedings before those authorities. The Guidance focuses on a number of provisions in the Directive, including those relating to scope, general obligation, entitlement to apply for measures, procedures and remedies, the presumption of authorship or ownership, injunctions, corrective measures, and the calculation of damages. The Guidance also seeks to clarify the concept of an intermediary, stating that economic operators which provide a service capable of being used by other persons in order to infringe IPR can, depending on the facts, be categorised as intermediaries within the meaning of Articles 9(1)(a) and 11 of the Directive, also in the absence of a specific relationship, such as a contractual link, between those parties. Finally, the Guidance also discusses the scope of injunctions, and that judicial authorities may, where appropriate, issue injunctions which entail specific monitoring obligations.

The Commission also published an Evaluation of the functioning of the Enforcement Directive. The Evaluation concluded that it has achieved the objective of approximating the legislative systems of the Member States for the civil enforcement of IPR, but also recognises that that there are differences in the way Member States apply certain provisions of the Directive (such as those on injunctions, damages and legal costs) across the Single Market, thereby limiting the effectiveness of the Directive. It would benefit from more best practices for public exchange, more transparency on IP-related case law and more national judges able to deal with IPR infringement claims.

The objective of IRIS is to publish information on legal and law-related policy developments that are relevant to the European audiovisual sector. Despite our efforts to ensure the accuracy of the content, the ultimate responsibility for the truthfulness of the facts on which we report is with the authors of the articles. Any opinions expressed in the articles are personal and should in no way be interpreted as representing the views of any organisations represented in its editorial board.

© European Audiovisual Observatory, Strasbourg (France)