The course of finalising this dissertation has been both exciting and challenging. I am thankful to all the people who have kept me on track until the finish line.

Nuffic, through the Netherlands Fellowship Programme (NFP), has provided me the opportunity and the financial resources to pursue my studies in the Netherlands. Nuffic Neso Indonesia has assisted me through the administrative process of obtaining this scholarship.

My promoters, Mario Rutten and Ben White, have been an incredible source of encouragement from the start of this project and throughout. Their support was not only confined to the business of producing a dissertation, but extended to the emotional and social support needed to actually get there. Mario Rutten has provided invaluable guidance in exploring different intellectual pathways and helping me find my way. Critical insights from Ben White have been a basis for self-reflection, especially of my own taken-for-granted assumptions.

I would also like to thank the members of my doctoral committee: Ria Reis, Patricia Spyer, Faturochman, Gerry van Klinken, and Gerben Nooteboom for their comments and inputs.

My affiliation with the KNAW (Koninklijke Nederlandse Academie van Wetenschappen) funded project, In Search of Middle Indonesia, was possible with the support of Henk S. Nordholt and Gerry van Klinken. This project has introduced me to a circle of scholars who have given constructive inputs during the process of writing this dissertation: Tamrin A. Tomagola, Pratikno, Mochtar Mas’oed, Pujo Semedi, Bambang Purwanto, Cornelis Lay, Erwan Purwanto, Nico
Warouw, Noorhaidi Hasan, Ratna Saptari, Patricia Spyer, Linda Herrera, Chris Brown, and Joe Errington. This project has allowed me to be part of a PhD group with Amalinda Savirani, Suzanne Naafs, Sylvia Tidey, and Basri Amin, with whom I have been able to have lively discussions, catharsis sessions, and some of my most enjoyable moments.

The International Institute of Social Studies has been generous to have allowed me to participate in classes at the Children, Youth, and Development programme. I also appreciate the support provided by Bridget O’Laughlin during my application process, the critical discussions with Linda Herrera and the administrative assistance of Sharmini Bissessar.

My seniors at the Center for Population and Policy Studies, Universitas Gadjah Mada encouraged me to further my studies on behalf of this institution. As director, Sukamdi has given me permission to study abroad. Irwan Abdullah has always believed in me, and made me believe, that following his footsteps to Dutch academic life would be a fruitful experience. My thanks also extend to Agus Dwiyanto, Anna Marie Wattie, and Made Pande Kutanegara.

In 2008, Faturochman, the dean of the Faculty of Psychology, Universitas Gadjah Mada, allowed me to pursue my studies, despite my position as a new staff at the faculty. His understanding and advice has been invaluable. The current dean, Supra Wimbarti, and vice deans, especially Rahmat Hidayat, and Head of the Social Psychology department, Koentjoro, have continued to allow me the time and space to finish my dissertation after my return to Indonesia.

PhD life is not only an intellectual journey, but a journey of friendship. I would like to thank my PhD fellows at the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR) for their friendship, especially during the early lonely months of the programme: Michiel Baas, Martin Boekelo, Anick Vollebergh, Frank van As, Tran Quan Anh, Ana M. Kajevska, Marieke van Eijk, Marcel van den Haak, Eline van Haastrecht, Roanne van Voorst, and Tjerk Jan Schuitmaker. Also many thanks to my office mates Sanneke Kloppenburg, Chip Huisman, and Daphne van der Pas, and members of the ‘youth group’, Lidewyde and Jonna Both. Jose Komen, Anneke Dammers, Miriam May, Philip Romer, Hermance Mettrop, Janus Oomen, Yomi van der Veen, Roos de Jager,
Joanne Oakes, Danny van der Poel, and Emilie van Tol also provided patience, persistence, and warmth, in assisting me through various administrative processes in the Netherlands.

I appreciate the friendship offered by my Indonesian friends in the Netherlands. First, the Indonesian families, Dedi Sjamsuddin, Agrar Sudrajet, Bambang and Ida, Bob, Rini Goenarto, Ria Tobing, were a source of comfort during my stay there. Furthermore, the Amstellers’ and the Koestraat gang’s great sense humour were unforgettable: Debby Tobing, Nuraini Juliastuti, Alpha Amirrachman, Dara Rosmailina, Hana Pawestri, Bernadetta, Rahma Rohadiat, Grace L. Nababan and Herman Boro, Enade Istyastono, Aufa Doarest, Deasy Simanjuntak, Najib Azca, and Lia Aulia. Life in the Netherlands has also been lively with the various gatherings of fellow alumni of the Faculty of Psychology, Universitas Gadjah Mada in the Netherlands: Yayuk Talens, Nur Rokhmah Hidayati, Winda Widyastuti, Agustina Sulastri, Chiefy Adi and Anastasia. I enjoyed the times spent with Taufik Kasturi, Meta Aurelia, Tyas, Kusumo Restu MW, and Ali Mashuri. My Indonesian fellow students from the 2007-2008 and 2009-2010 batches at the International Institute for Social Studies, notably Grace Leksana, Julia, Renvi Liasari, Sri Utami, and Shintong Febby provided many pleasurable moments.

I am especially grateful to Helmy Fuady and Amalinda Savirani who were always there during my ups and downs. Un Leang’s cooking, walks with Athi Sivan, were also something I looked forward to. My long-time friendship with Roy Huijsmans and Marieke Postma has only grown stronger over the years of my stay in the Netherlands. Evita Hanie P. and Deden D. Iskandar have shown incredible hospitality at their home in Germany during rough times.

My colleagues and friends at Universitas Gadjah Mada have been very understanding of my absence throughout my study leave. I am indebted to those at the Social Psychology Department, especially Budi Purwanto, Hadi Sutarmanto, Avin F. Helmi, M. As’ad, Helly P. Soetjipto and Yopina G. Pertiwi. My appreciation also goes to my colleagues at the Center for Indigenous and Cultural Psychology, particularly to Kwartarini Yuniarti and Banyu Wicaksono. The friendship offered by the junior lecturers at the Faculty of Psychology: Arum Febriani, Ariana Marastuti, Edilburga W.S., Tri H. Tyas, Fuad Chamsyah,
Acknowledgements

During my first year of study, my colleagues at the Faculty of Psychology, Ahmad Dahlan University, generously took on my responsibilities. In particular I thank Herlina Siwi Widiana, Sri Kushartati, and Alfi Purnamasari. Towards the end of my PhD journey, Ruth MacKenzie has assisted in editing my manuscript, Suzanne Naafs in translating the summary to Dutch, the Risman Marah team for the lay out, Sanneke Kloppenburg and Shohib Sifatar in being my paranymphs, and Roanne van Voorst in being my ‘shadow paranymph’.

Pontianak has been an inspiring learning site. For this, I am thankful to everyone there who assisted me in that learning process. I would especially like to thank my two wonderful assistants, Ika and Ferry. They have consistently assisted me throughout the years Agus Hartanto at the West Kalimantan Statistics Bureau, Syarif Ibrahim Alqadrie and Hardie Sudjaie from the Faculty of Social Sciences at Tanjungpura University willingly provided the materials I needed and the time to engage in stimulating discussions. Zaenuddin from STAIN Pontianak and Hartono, the director of STMIK Widya Dharma Pontianak also provided much assistance during my fieldwork. Julia, Pay Jarot Sujarwo, and Rizal Palipi shared their stories and knowledge about young people’s lives in Pontianak. Nevertheless, I have mostly learned from my informants, and to them I am grateful.

My extended family in Pontianak and Yogyakarta have been remarkably supportive. I would like to thank the families of Sa’edah, Hanapi, Amin, Pak Ngah, Uteh, Encik, Fauzie Siswanto, and Soebardi. I express my gratitude for the endless support from my parents-in-law, Abdul Muthalib and Rabe’ah, and my sisters-in-law, Rini Setyawati and Rina Sari.
I am deeply indebted to my parents, Sjafri Sairin and Siti Fatimah, who have given me their unconditional love. Along with my sisters, Tiessa A. Minza and Felma A. Minza, they have ensured the well-being of my daughter who I left behind – including providing trustworthy nannies, Ery and Atul, to whom I am also thankful to have had.

This PhD journey would have never started if it were not for my husband, Rosehan Ansyari. Coming close to cancelling my studies a week before my departure to Amsterdam, his insistence that I continue my studies prevented me from doing so. His trust and understanding throughout the years has been remarkable. Last but not least, I will always remember the sacrifice of my little PhD heroine, Ezriana Daisha Ansyari, who was left ‘motherless’ at the very young age of three and a half months. I am grateful to have them both in my life.
