1.1  A brief history of educating pupils with an immigrant background 1
    1.1.1  "Black" and "white" schools 3
    1.1.2  Was the integration in Dutch society of youth with a migrant background failing? 4
    1.1.3  Segregation 5

1.2  Building upon success 6
    1.2.1  A focus on local contexts and distinct groups 8

1.3  Outline of the thesis 8
    1.3.1  Segregation at zip-code level 8
    1.3.2  Three socio-economically challenged zip-code areas 9
    1.3.3  Distance measures offer new insights into patterns of secondary school choice 9
    1.3.4  Matching relevant research findings with concrete school questions 10
    1.3.5  Scientific and societal contributions 11

2  The educational gap and neighbourhood composition ............................................... 12

2.1  Introduction 12

2.2  Previous research 17

2.3  Methods and data 22
4 Patterns in secondary school selection in the context of unlimited choice .... 67

4.1 Introduction 67

4.2 Previous research 72

4.3 Data and Methods 80

4.3.1 BRON data and additional data sources 80
4.3.2 Ethnic diverse populations in the four major cities 80
4.3.3 Distance measurements 82
4.3.4 SES indices 83
4.3.5 Indicators of pupils’ prior achievement and secondary school quality 83
4.3.6 Limitation 84

4.4 Results 84

4.4.1 A general overview of socio-economic measurements and distance to school 85
4.4.2 Distance to school 88
4.4.3 Choosing the nearest school or not 91
4.4.4 Selectivity of choice 94
4.4.5 School choice and segregation 97
4.4.6 Benefits of school choice? 101

4.5 Conclusions and discussion 104

4.5.1 Who travels further to school? 104
4.5.2 Differential sorting, mobility increases segregation 104
4.5.3 Upward mobility, an important opportunity for migrant students 105
4.5.4 Policy implications and further research 105

4.6 Appendices 107

4.6.1 Explanation of variables 108

5 A tailor made transfer of scientific knowledge to school practice ...............119

5.1 Introduction 119

5.2 Previous research 121

5.3 Methodology 126

5.3.1 Six participating school leaders 127
5.3.2 Five separate phases of investigation 129
5.4 Portraits of the participating schools and their main questions

5.4.1 School A: An enriched idea of the school's added value for students with a migrant family history

5.4.2 School B: the advantage of a professional review of academic literature

5.4.3 School C: The important next step, translating research outcomes to teacher practices

5.4.4 School D: Taking time to focus on the complex questions we encounter

5.4.5 School E: The pleasure of taking time for reflection

5.4.6 School F: Time is the most scarce ingredient

5.5 Findings

5.6 Conclusions and Discussion

5.6.1 Principals have questions that can be linked to research outcomes

5.6.2 Comparable questions, different approaches

5.6.3 Actual applications of academic knowledge and impediments

5.6.4 Contributing to the use of existing research in school practice

5.6.5 Contributing to research into the valorisation of scientific knowledge

5.6.6 Limitations and further research

5.7 Appendices

6 Conclusions and Discussion

6.1 Conclusions

6.2 Policy Implications

6.2.1 A different perspective on segregation

6.2.2 Stable school careers

6.2.3 Validation of academic knowledge

6.2.4 The crucial importance of data

6.3 Limitations and further research
