From the ground up: Surface and sub-surface effects in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Netherlandish paintings
Vandivere, A.L.S.

Citation for published version (APA):
Vandivere, A. L. S. (2013). From the ground up: Surface and sub-surface effects in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Netherlandish paintings
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction ......................................................... 1

Articles

1. Cloeck en veerdigh: Energetic and skillful painting techniques of the sixteenth-century Leiden School

2. Reconstructing intermediate layers in early Netherlandish paintings

2.1 ‘A translucent flesh-coloured primuersel’: Intermediate layers and visible underdrawing in Hieronymus Bosch’s paintings
   (Currently unpublished)

3. Surface effects in paintings by Jan van Eyck
   Submitted for the postprints of the Van Eyck Studies Colloquium, Symposium XVIII for the study of underdrawing and technology in painting, 19-21/09/12, Brussels, forthcoming 2013

3.1 Surface effects and the depiction of fabrics
   (Currently unpublished)

3.2 Surface effects in the context of early Netherlandish paintings
   (Currently unpublished)

3.3 Changing drapery, recipes and practice

Conclusion ......................................................... 153

Bibliography ....................................................... 159

Summary / Nederlandse samenvatting ........................................... 173

Acknowledgements ................................................ 183
APPENDICES
on enclosed CD-ROM

Articles

Reconstructions

4a General information about reconstructions made for From the Ground Up

4b Reconstruction of visible underdrawing in the Lamentation by Cornelis Engebrechtsz

4c Reconstructions of intermediate layers in early Netherlandish paintings

4d Reconstructions of “scraped wool” texture in red fabrics by Geertgen tot Sint Jans

4e Reconstructions of changeant fabrics in paintings by Cornelis Engebrechtsz