ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing this thesis would not have been possible without the help of others. I would like to express gratitude to all who have over the years helped me in some way. I am thankful to the following persons in particular:

First of all to my supervisors, thank you for your dedication to this research project and your interest in me personally. Dick, you have stimulated me to follow my sometimes exotic theoretical hunches. I am grateful for your trust and support which has inspired me to keep going. I also owe you thanks for supporting my visit to ‘our colleagues in Paris’. Evelien, I have enjoyed and benefitted from your talent to bring ideas and data down to neat schedules. This has helped me to think and write more clearly. It has also been stimulating to come in contact with other researchers on care and citizenship, thanks to your networking activities. Jeannette, I admire and have greatly benefitted from your passion for the mental health field. Your inside knowledge has been invaluable to this project. Your support during some of the vicissitudes of the project was heartening. Isn’t it amazing how referring to ‘pieces of gut’ can sometimes be a way of doing good?

The other members of my examining board prof. dr. Dehue, dr. Kroon, prof. dr. Mol, prof. dr. Van Os and prof. dr. Trappenburg, thank you for having evaluated my manuscript and for your willingness to participate in my public defence.

I thank the VSB fonds, the kfHein fonds and Mondriaan Zorggroep, financers of this project, for their trust in and support of this research project. I also thank Stichting Onderweg for their role in financing the project and for the interest they have shown in my personal life throughout the years. Nicole, thanks for the pleasant cooperation, particularly during the organisation of the symposium Anders Bekenen! I also thank Tönnes Gorgels for his role in the organisation of this same symposium and Robin Glendenning for editing my manuscripts.

The anonymous quotes in this thesis stem from clients and professionals who have kindly allowed me to enter their lives and professional practices. I am grateful to the staff and clients of the mental health centre where I conducted my fieldwork for their openness and friendliness during my stay there. I also thank the managers of this centre for giving me access to the many living situations I studied. I am particularly grateful to Detlef Petry for his inspiring support of this project.

To my office-mates – Corlien, Jip, Jacqueline, Anouk, Antje, and Marlies – I say thanks for the merry banter and for upgrading my medical knowledge. Jacqueline, it has been a pleasure sharing the ‘motherhood experience’ with you! Jip, this indeed is the end of an era. Never a dull moment, I have enjoyed having such a colourful office-mate. I also thank my other colleagues at the Department of General Practice and am particularly grateful for the warm interest of Jolanda, Myra, and Sanne: your support has helped me reach the finish.

I have also very much enjoyed contact with fellow researchers outside of the Department of General Practice: colleagues at the very ‘sociable’ department of Public Health, at other AMC departments, at the Sociology and Anthropology department of the UvA, at the various reading groups I phased in and out of and PhD’s elsewhere still: it has been a pleasure sharing the ups and downs of doing research with you. More specifically I would like thank: Anna, Beate, Charlotte, Eline, Fania, Jeroen, Katelijne, Laurens, Lineke, Lucas, Mirjam, Uzor, Victor P., and Victor T. for their out-of-office collegiality.

During my project I spent four thrilling months in Paris at the Centre de Sociologie de l’Innovation. I am very happy to have stayed there and would like to take this opportunity to thank this centre for its hospitality. I would like to thank Benjamin, Francesca, Julien and Katharina in particular for having taken pity on a poor stranger and showing me a good time in Paris during these months. In addition, I thank the researchers and care professionals I interviewed during this period for their readiness to explain the French mental health context to a foreigner.

I don’t know whether PhDs are in bigger need of diversion than people with ‘normal’ jobs. Either way, a big thanks to all my friends who sufficed me with the right kind of diversion throughout the years. Going out with Frouke, Heiko, Hugo, Jacqueline, Judith, Kim, Mark, Marnix and Mirjam has been just what the doctor ordered. Thanks for a lot of fun! Jacqueline, for over decade, you have been my best friend. I value your friendship and respect your diligent counsel; thanks for being my paranimf. Thank you also to the Ines – Albertine, Eline, Elske, Jacqueline, Johanneke and Petra – for keeping my beta-mind keen and for our lovely diners and weekends. Thank you to my very own tea party – Astrid, Judith, Kim and Madeleine – for sharing scones and keeping my roots intact. Intermittent dinners and drinks with Elmer & Edith, Florence & Sibren, Joost, Michiel, Niels, Peter, Stephanie & Karel and Will & Magda have also helped me keep the spirit. Amâde, Eline, Helen and Mirjam I thank for het niet-verwateren, although I don’t hope that the last year finally did us in! Mirjam, you took niet-verwateren so seriously that you decided to follow me to the AMC. I think this calls for a retribution and I am very happy to have selected such a dedicated paranimf.

To my family I am extremely grateful for having taken such good care of Tobias while I was working on this thesis. Without your help I would undoubtedly have just quit. I’m privileged to have a large family (that’s even been considerably extended during these past years!) ready to back me up. I would like to thank my Mum and Dad in particular for having stimulated my scientific interest. Although we never much discussed the subject of my thesis, without your support I wouldn’t stand to defend a thesis the 18th. And then finally the person I am most thankful to: Jean Philippe. Favourite colleague, respected sparring partner, best friend and dedicated husband; I am deeply grateful for all the ways in which you come to my aid.
