The parameters of constitutional conflict after Melloni

Besselink, L.F.M.

Published in: European Current Law

Citation for published version (APA):

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: https://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS
Maria Thomas, Berlin
Attorney at Law
Stefan Legal, H. Berlin
Kostas Christidis, LL.B. (Athens)
L.M. (London)
Legal Advisor
Katerina Kostakou,
Estate Manager, Century, EPA, Copenhagen

Contents

FOCUS
The Parameters of Constitutional Conflict after Melloni.......................... 1169

LEGISLATION, CASES, ARTICLES
Digests of Legislation, Cases and Articles.............................................1193

REFERENCE SECTION
Legislation Recently Passed
European Union................................................................. 1263
International...............................................................1270

Lists
Table of Treaty Provisions Referred to List of Legislation Digested
List of Cases

Index

Issue 10 reports may be cited as: [2014] 10 Euro. C.L.
FOCUS

The Parameters of Constitutional Conflict after Melloni

Leonard F.M. Besselink
Chair of Constitutional Law, Amsterdam Centre of European Law and Governance, University of Amsterdam

Abstract

Melloni makes clear that primacy of EU law is not about citizens' rights: even the core of their constitutional rights under national law has to be set aside in favour of the "primacy, unity and effectiveness" of EU law. Melloni extends the duty to set aside citizens' constitutional rights also to EU law that is not directly effective. The court finds it acceptable that a framework element that "harmonises fundamental rights and falls short of the constitutional standards of a Member State must override constitutional rights iff that EU act lives up to the minimum standards of the ECtHR in abstract terms. This reopens a path to constitutional conflict in the area of fundamental rights protection that was expected to be closed since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty. The court's reasoning shows few signs of authentic "constitutional dialogue", by ignoring the fact that Melloni involved the core of a constitutional right affecting human dignity under Spanish constitutional law. Once again, Melloni also illustrates that constitutional conflict is not merely a matter between a Member State and the Court of Justice, but may exist also between Member State courts and executives, thus making the Court of Justice an arbiter of national constitutional conflict. The Spanish Constitutional Court, in its follow-up judgment, has refused to accept either the constitutional supremacy of EU law or, by implication, the Court of Justice unreserved position on art.53 of the Charter, but managed to avoid actual and overt constitutional conflict by an overall lowering of its autonomous fundamental rights standard. Such practical backing off can hardly be expected to occur with constitutional courts with nationally stronger positions of legitimacy in more general constitutional terms. Melloni can be understood in the context of competing paradigms of rights, power and the relations between constitutional orders.

Introduction

European integration was the way to overcome the devastation that sovereign powers had brought Europe over centuries. The rationale to overcome the habits of sovereignty largely coincided with that of post-war constitutionalism in the European state orders. The constitutional concerns with power arrangements for the exercise of authority that dominated the "long 19th century" was to be offset by the paradigm of citizens' rights that came to dominate the post-war 20th century discourse, also that of EU law. The European Union is there primarily for its citizens and integration is realised through their rights. This is how the history of the Court of Justice's case law, from Van Gend & Loos and Costa v ENEL to the enunciation of European citizenship as destined to be "the fundamental status" of citizens (Grzelczyk and its progeny), is usually read. If this were a correct reading, the protection of citizens' fundamental rights would be of prime concern to the Court of Justice. We know, of course, that things are slightly more subtle, both historically and presently. And Melloni confirms this.

1 This article was first produced by Thomson Reuters (Professional) UK Limited in European Law Review (2014) 39 417-425.
3 Melloni v Ministero delle Finanze (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C.M.L.R. 45.
Fundamental rights protection was originally a matter on which national constitutional courts held the European Court of Justice to account; the Court of Justice had to provide fundamental rights protection that was either substantively, or as to the level of judicial scrutiny, equivalent to that provided by the national courts or by the European Court of Human Rights. In as far as the Union would not provide such protection, EU law would not be able to provide fundamental rights protection that was either substantively, or as to the level of judicial scrutiny, equivalent to that provided by the national courts or by the European Court of Human Rights. In as far as the Union would not provide such protection, EU law would not be able to provide fundamental rights protection that was either substantively, or as to the level of judicial scrutiny, equivalent to that provided by the national courts or by the European Court of Human Rights. In as far as the Union would not provide such protection, EU law would not be able to provide fundamental rights protection that was either substantively, or as to the level of judicial scrutiny, equivalent to that provided by the national courts or by the European Court of Human Rights. In as far as the Union would not provide such protection, EU law would not be able to provide fundamental rights protection that was either substantively, or as to the level of judicial scrutiny, equivalent to that provided by the national courts or by the European Court of Human Rights.

For an attempt to differentiate the scope of EU law and the scope of the Charter now reected in, Fransson, see e.g.

Wineskins: Constitutional Law commented on but, should not be applied and unless, and unchecked.

for freedoms the field of constitutional conflict are constitutional courts are as some Member States acts subject. Since the Court of Justice began protecting ECHR in accordance with minimum Strasbourg standards, now and that the Charter of Fundamental Rights was incorporated into EU law, leave power can be said to have turned; the Court of Justice holds national authorities, including courts, to account as to the protection they provide for EU fundamental rights in national jurisdictions. Whenever Member State authorities act within the scope of EU law, they must observe EU fundamental rights—this is the unique message of Åkerberg Fransson.4

From the perspective of the protection of rights, this would appear to be a good thing: power is offset by rights—unless, of course, the standard of EU fundamental rights fails short of the national standard. In that case, we are back at the historical starting position: EU law does not guarantee rights as they are protected in a Member State but, to the contrary, infringes fundamental rights—power exercised by Member State authorities is no longer offset by the rights that citizens enjoy in the national legal order. Theoretically, the conflict could be solved by taking the route of the substantive values of constitutionalism, that is, by allowing for higher national standards, as is normally the case under international human rights law, and as, in one reading of this provision, would follow from art.33 of the Charter. However, the Melloni judgment of the Court of Justice of February 26, 2013, rejects that reading and holds that art.33 cannot allow for higher levels of national protection if this interferes with the privacy, unity and effectiveness of EU law, thus reducing art.33’s meaning to insignificance. Thus, also, the court reopens the field of constitutional conflict as concerns fundamental rights protection—unless, of course, constitutional courts are willing to reduce their standards of fundamental rights protection ‘downwards’ if concerns, leave power can be said to have turned; the Court of Justice holds national authorities, including courts, to account as to the protection they provide for EU fundamental rights in national jurisdictions. Whenever Member State authorities act within the scope of EU law, they must observe EU fundamental rights—this is the unique message of Åkerberg Fransson.4

In this case comment, the ruling in Melloni is summarized, critically analysed and commented on from the perspective of relations between constitutional norms. To that purpose,

1 This did not occur until Bernard Canestra’s Commission (C:274/99 PJ) [2001] ECHR 1-613; [2001] 1 CLMV 58.
3 Åkerberg Fransson (C:577/10) [2013] 2 CLMV 46; 66, to which see H. Wafall and B. van Bedale, ‘New Ways into Old Windows: the Scope of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU after Åkerberg Fransson’ (2013) 30 3 EJ 669. For an attempt to differentiate the scope of EU law and the scope of the Charter, now reected in, Fransson, see e.g.
5 ECHR art 5. ‘Nothing in this Convention shall be constraen as limiting or derogating from any of the rights and freedoms which are recognized for the time being in any High Contracting Party in any treaty, convention, regulations or custom on the present that the present Court does not recognize such rights that it recognizes them in a lower respect.”

1770 European Current Law Issue 10 2014

we must not only pay attention to the Court of Justice’s judgment, but also briefly outline how the proceedings ended in the Spanish Constitutional Court, which handed down its follow-up judgment on February 13, 2014.

The case at the Court of Justice

Facts

Sofian Melloni is a stockbroker who set up financial investment schemes in which the savings of some 1,800 persons are reported to have disappeared. Melloni also disappeared for a while. In his absence, he was convicted to 18 years’ imprisonment, subsequently reduced to 10 years owing to the introduction of statutory limitations, a conviction confirmed in appeal and convicted. After he had at last been arrested, his surrender to Italy was requested for execution of the prison sentence under a European Arrest Warrant in August 2008. This surrender was consented to by the Audiencia Nacional (Spanish High Court). This court rejected Melloni’s contention that his rights to a fair trial under art.24(2) of the Spanish Constitution had been infringed, Melloni claiming, first, that he had revoked the appointment of the advocates that had defended him at first instance and, secondly, that his surrender should have been made conditional on the possibility of retrial. Melloni subsequently filed a constitutional complaint at the Spanish Constitutional Court, the Tribunal Constitutionali, asserting that his rights of defence under art.24(2) of the Spanish Constitution were infringed, on the same grounds invoked at the High Court.

Spanish constitutional protection of the right to a fair trial

(Under the case law of the Tribunal Constitutionali, the right to be present at a criminal trial is an essential part of the right to a fair trial and to defence [art.24(2) of the Constitution). The Spanish Constitutional Court had established that constitutional rights also have effect in relation to institutions external to the Spanish legal order, but in the case of an allegation of such an "indirect" infringement by an external authority, the threshold for establishing an infringement is higher: it must concern the very core of the right in a manner that affects human dignity. In Melloni’s case, the Constitutional Court had established that the right to a fair trial would be infringed by the present at the High Court, if the right to be present in criminal trials were be denied in cases of very serious offences; and, hence, extradition or surrender of a person to a country there is otherwise no right to a retrial after trial in absence would have to be made conditional on allowing for retrial of the person extradited or surrendered. The denial of the right to be present at a trial and the lack of a right to retrial in such cases were considered to touch the core of the right to a fair trial, affecting human dignity. This was at stake in the case of Melloni in Italy, there is also a right to a retrial after conviction in absence for a serious offence. The question thus arose whether Framework Decision 2002/584 on the European Arrest Warrant, which does not explicitly allow for making the surrender conditional on retrial, precludes such a condition in order to guarantee the rights of defence of the person surrendered.

The EAW Framework Decision

Framework Decision 2002/584 in its original version allowed, in principle, making surrender for execution of a conviction conditional on the possibility of retrial in cases of trial in absence [art.51]. Signiicant differences in legal traditions regarding trial in absence—what is regular practice in one Member State is constitutionally barred in another—were reason to replace this provision with another set of more precise provisions of the amending Framework Decision 2009/299.

The amended Framework Decision specifies the conditions under which conviction in a trial in absentia cannot constitute a reason for non-surrender of the convicted person (art.4(a)(1) of the amended EAW Framework Decision). The surrender of the person cannot be refused—among other things—in the following circumstances:

- the person was unequivocally aware of the scheduled trial, the date and place of it, and of the fact that a conviction may follow also in this person’s absence;
- the person was defended by legal counsel whom he or she had mandated, appointed either by the person concerned or by the State.

In the case of Mr Melloni, these grounds were relevant: on that basis, his surrender must take place with no right to retrial, a situation that was unconstitutional under Spanish law.

The questions referred to the European Court of Justice

The first of the Tribunal Constitutionali's three questions was whether Framework Decision 2002/584 on the European Arrest Warrant, which does not explicitly allow for making the surrender conditional on retrial, precludes such a condition in order to guarantee the fundamental rights of defence of the person surrendered. Secondly, if the EAW Framework Decision does preclude such a condition, it was asked whether this is compatible with the right to a fair trial and the rights of defence under arts 47 and 48 of the Charter.

The third and final question posed would be relevant if the Framework Decision were to be judged compatible with the Charter, and it concerned art.53 of the Charter. This provision reads as follows:

"Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions."

The Tribunal Constitutionali asked whether this provision allows a Member State, "to make the surrender of a person convicted in absentia conditional upon the conviction being open to review in the requesting State, thus affecting [the right to a fair trial and the rights of defence] a greater level of protection than that deriving from European Union law in order to avoid an interpretation which would, or adversely affects a fundamental right recognised by the Constitution of the first-mentioned Member State?" 11

1. J. Wiatrak, "The European Arrest Warrant and Applicable Standards of Fundamental Rights in the EU" (2013) 2 Review of European Administrative Law 40;
3. Melloni (C-399/12) [2013] 2 CMLR 63 at [63].

The judgment of the Grand Chamber

Admissibility

The court first addressed an issue of admissibility arising for reasons of intertemporal law. The Spanish High Court had ordered the surrender of Melloni on September 12, 2008, while the implementation deadline of the new art.4(a) of the EAW Framework Decision was March 28, 2011, with the possibility of a unilateral extension to January 1, 2014, of which Italy had availed itself; hence, the applicable EU provision was that of the old EAW Framework Decision, which allows for the kind of condition that Spanish authorities would have to impose under Spanish constitutional law.

The Court of Justice rejects this view, holding that the fact that Italy had decided to defer the implementation deadline until January 1, 2014 does not make the present request for a preliminary ruling inadmissible:

"It is apparent from the order for reference that, in order to interpret the fundamental rights recognised under the Spanish Constitution in accordance with the international treaties ratified by the Kingdom of Spain, the national court wishes to take into consideration the relevant provisions of EU law to determine the substantive content of the right to a fair trial guaranteed by Article 24(2) of that Constitution." 12

Evidently, if a constitutional court in interpreting the autonomous meaning of a national constitutional provision wishes to take EU law into account, the Court of Justice will provide it with the requested information as to the meaning of the relevant EU law, also if this is merely for the purpose of determining the autonomous meaning of national constitutional law. This is in line with earlier admissibility case law, but this time explicitly framed with regard to deciding national constitutional questions autonomously. The particular framing of the court's judgment in relation to the Spanish Constitutional Court's task is picked up subsequently by the latter court in its follow-up judgment, as I argue below.

Are there unassailable possibilities of protecting fundamental rights?

The first question submitted was whether art.4(a)(1) of the Framework Decision allows the executing judicial authorities to make the execution of a European arrest warrant conditional upon the convictions rendered in absentia being open to review in the issuing Member State, in order to guarantee the rights of defence of the person surrendered.

Essentially, this question concerns the exhaustiveness of the list of cases in which the national court must execute the arrest warrant in the absence of the right of retrial in the requesting state (art.4(a)(1) under (a) and (b)). From the judgment of the Spanish Constitutional Court by which this question was referred—the first reference in its history—it appears that the referring court did not wish to challenge the exhaustiveness of the list of cases of actual non-surrender as such, but only the exceptional situation of conditioning the surrender under circumstances in which the application would lead to an infringement of fundamental rights protected under primary EU law, as the Framework Decision itself provides that it, "shall not have the effect of modifying the obligation to respect fundamental rights and fundamental legal principles as enshrined in Article 6 of the Treaty, including the right of defence of persons subject to criminal proceedings, and any obligations incumbent upon judicial authorities in this respect shall remain unaffected." (Framework Decision 2009/299 art.2(2))
So, in reality, the question posed was whether the necessity of protecting fundamental rights could be considered as a general condition for the application of art.4(a)(1) of the Framework Decision. This is not an odd question. After all, the Framework Decision itself claims that it does not prevent the application of fundamental rights, which are, as the Spanish Constitutional Court emphasises, primary rules to which secondary law (the Framework Decision) is subject, if an application of secondary EU law is subject to its being in conformity with fundamental rights. Thus, viewed, pieces of legislation of exclusive harmonisation are also always subject to an unwritten exception if they would lead under a particular set of circumstances to an infringement of fundamental rights. In other words, the Spanish Constitutional Court posed a question like that addressed in NOS: does mutual recognition allow for fundamental rights exceptions not explicitly provided for in secondary legislation? This is a controversial question in EU law since, as is commonly held, it potentially undermines the notion of mutual recognition and restricts the meaning of the mutual recognition principle.

The Court of Justice sidesteps the issue by rephrasing the question, leaving out entirely the referring court's explicit reference to the fundamental rights conditionality of secondary law and its application, saying that:

"The Tribunal Constitutional seeks, in essence, whether Article 4a(1) of Framework Decision 2002/584 must be interpreted as precluding the executing judicial authorities, in the circumstances specified in that provision, from making the execution of a European arrest warrant issued for the purposes of executing a sentence conditional upon the conviction rendered in absentia being open to review in the issuing Member State."

The court's answer relies heavily on Bada, in which the court did not want to know about fundamental rights conditionality. In Melloni, it reiterates that the EAW's objective is that of replacing a multilateral system of extradition with a simplified and more effective system based on a high degree of confidence that should exist between Member States. The Framework Decision consequently only allows refusal of the execution of a warrant in cases of mandatory non-execution explicitly provided for. The executing judicial authority may make the execution of a European arrest warrant subject solely to the conditions set out in the Framework Decision. Basing itself on the wording of the optional ground for non-execution of a European Arrest Warrant provided in art.4(a)(1), the court concludes that the provision precludes "making the surrender of a person convicted in absentia conditional upon the conviction being open to review in the issuing Member State."

The court seeks further confirmation of this "literal interpretation" in the specific objective of the new art.4(a), which is to restrict the opportunities for refusing to execute an arrest warrant and to harmonise the grounds for non-recognition of judgments, allowing "the executing authority to execute the decision despite the absence of the person at the trial, while fully respecting the person's right of defence": Surrender can hence not be made subject to a refusal in the issuing Member State, if the person was aware of the trial while absent or has given a mandate to the legal counsel that defended him or her during that trial. Although the court's rephrasing of the question polished it away, the issue of fundamental rights could not be totally avoided either. The court remones away, however, the possibility of secondary law being applied in conformity with fundamental rights beyond the text of the Framework Decision, by holding—with reference to the Opinion of the Advocate General—that the EU legislature's providing for:

19 Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [41]-[42].
21 Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [40].
22 Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [41]-[42].
25 "an exhaustive list of exceptions of the circumstances in which the execution of a European arrest warrant issued in order to enforce a decision rendered in absentia must be regarded as not infringing the rights of the defence, is incompatible with any extension of the possibility for the executing judicial authority to make that execution conditional on the conviction being open to review in order to guarantee the rights of defence of the person concerned." It is not clear how this is relevant to the case of Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [49].
26 Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [49].
27 The Advocate General in the relevant sections of his Opinion had established the intention of the legislature as apparent from the text of the Framework Decision. In other words, if the EU legislature provides an exhaustive list of cases in which it deems a fundamental right to be duly observed, there is no need of the matter and there can be no further appeal to fundamental rights whatever.
28 "it should be noted that that argument, in reality, raises the question of the compatibility of Article 4a of Framework Decision 2002/584 with the fundamental rights protected in the legal order of the European Union."
29 I am referring to the decisions of the Court of Justice in C-399/11 and C-444/11, in which the Court has interpreted the framework decision as precluding the execution of an arrest warrant in cases of absentia, which is considered to be compatible with the right to a fair trial, if the person has not been informed of the date and place of the trial or was defended by a legal councilor to whom he had given a mandate to do so."
30 Melloni (C-399/11) [2013] 2 C M I R 43 at [49].
This is, the court states, in keeping with ECtHR case-law, and the court confirms the stated objective of the pending Framework Decision “to enhance the procedural rights of persons subject to criminal proceedings whilst improving mutual recognition of judicial decisions between Member States”. On this basis, the court concludes:

“Article 4(a)(1) and (b) of Framework Decision 2002/584 lays down the circumstances in which the person concerned must be deemed to have waived, voluntarily and unambiguously, his right to be present at his trial, with the result that the execution of a European arrest warrant issued for the purposes of executing the sentence of a person convicted in absentia cannot be made subject to the condition that that person may claim the benefit of a retrial at which he is present in the issuing Member State.”

The court then immediately concludes from this that art 4(a)(1) “does not dispense” the right to an effective remedy and the rights of defence under arts 47 and 48(2) of the Charter and is therefore compatible with these provisions.

Apparently, the court derives the element of a “voluntary and unambiguous” waiver by the convicted person from the case law of the ECtHR, since it is not in the text of art 4(a)(1) of the Framework Decision (which speaks in various places only about “unequivocally” waiving one’s right to be present, which does not necessarily imply “voluntarily” waiving that right).

Does Article 53 of the Charter allow Spain’s higher level of protection to apply?

Whereas the referring Constitutional Court presented three interpretations of art 53 of the Charter, the Court of Justice cuts the judicial dialogue short and dismisses out of hand any interpretation which would allow a Member State to apply the standard of protection of fundamental rights guaranteed by its constitution when that standard is higher than that deriving from the Charter and, where necessary, to give it priority over the application of provisions of EU law. According to the court, any such reading aims to subject surrender “to conditions intended to avoid an interpretation which restricts or adversely affects fundamental rights recognised by its constitution, even though the application of such conditions is not allowed under Article 4(a)1 of Framework Decision 2002/584”. This the court cannot accept:

“That interpretation of Article 53 of the Charter would undermine the principle of the primacy of EU law (inasmuch as it would allow a Member State to disapply EU legal rules which are fully in compliance with the Charter where they infringe the fundamental rights guaranteed by that State’s constitution.

It is settled case-law that, by virtue of the principle of primacy of EU law, which is an essential feature of the EU legal order (see Opinion 1/92 [1991] ECR I-6879, paragraph 21, and Opinion 1/99 [2011] ECR I-1137, paragraph 65), rules of national law, even of a constitutional order, cannot be allowed to undermine the effectiveness of EU law on the territory of that State (see, to that effect, inter alia, Case C-77/90 Internationale Handelsgesellschaft v[1991] ECR I-1125, paragraph 3, and Case C-409/96 Winner Wettels [2010] ECR I-8015, paragraph 61).

It is true that Article 53 of the Charter confirms that, where an EU legal act calls for national implementing measures, national authorities and courts remain free to apply national standards of protection of fundamental rights, provided that the level of protection provided for by the Charter, as interpreted by the Court, and the primary, unity and effectiveness of EU law are not thereby compromised.”

In support of this position, the court points out that a Member State is not allowed to refuse to execute a European arrest warrant when the person concerned is in one of the situations mentioned in art 4(a)(1) of the Framework Decision. This provision was intended to solve the difficulties in the area of recognition of verdicts rendered in absentia, and effects:

“a harmonisation of the execution of a European arrest warrant in the event of a conviction rendered in absentia, which reflects the consensus reached by all the Member States regarding the scope to be given under EU law to the procedural rights enjoyed by persons convicted in absentia who are the subject of a European arrest warrant.”

The court then refers to the considerations of unity and effectiveness:

“Consequently, allowing a Member State to avail itself of Article 53 of the Charter to make the surrender of a person convicted in absentia conditional upon the conviction being open to review in the issuing Member State, a possibility not provided for under Framework Decision 2009/299, in order to avoid an adverse effect on the right to a fair trial and the rights of the defence guaranteed by the constitution of the executing Member State, by casting doubt on the uniformity of the standard of protection of fundamental rights as defined in that framework decision, would undermine the principles of mutual trust and recognition which that decision purports to uphold and would, therefore, compromise the efficacy of that framework decision.”

The case at the Tribunal Constitutional

On February 13, 2014, the Tribunal Constitutional handed down its follow-up judgment in Melloni, which was published on March 11. In the third paragraph of the grounds of its judgment, the Tribunal notes that the answers of the Court of Justice are "very useful" (de gran utilidad), but nonetheless need to be supplemented with the doctrine laid down in the Tribunal’s judgment in the Constitutional Treaty case of 2004. It reaffirms that the transfer of powers under the Spanish Constitution is subject to substantive limits, namely “respect of the sovereignty of the State, of our fundamental constitutional structures and of the system of fundamental principles and values consecrated in our Constitution, in which fundamental rights acquire their proper substance.” It then reproduces, with reference to the 2004 judgment, that applying the primacy of EU law is based on the presupposition of respect for fundamental national constitutional structures, which includes fundamental rights. It recalls that it is not the Constitution but the Treaties that are the framework of validity for Union legislation, "although the Constitution requires that the legislation accepted as the result of the transfer be compatible with its basic values and principles," Moreover, of particular importance in the context of art.53 of the Charter, it repeats that, notwithstanding all this, the Tribunal has held that, "in the unlikely case in which, in the ulterior development of European Union law, this law would prove to be irreconcilable with the Spanish Constitution, while the hypothetical infringement of European law [of primary European law] is not remedied by the ordinary channels provided [by that law], ultimately, the conservation of the sovereignty of the Spanish people and the supremacy of the Constitution which it has given itself could lead this Court to approach the problems which in such a case would arise, through the corresponding constitutional procedures, problems which under current circumstances are considered inessential."\(^\text{39}\)

Next, the Tribunal recapitulates its doctrine on "indirect" infringements of the right to a fair trial under art.24 of the Spanish Constitution, as developed in its case law, but emphasises the importance of international human rights treaties, with which the constitutional value system coincides. The constitutional standard by which the order to surrender Mr Melloni needs to be judged includes, therefore, the human rights treaties to which Spain is a party, among which are the ECHR and Charter of Fundamental Rights as interpreted by the competent organs established by the relevant treaties, and these interpretations in turn are, "essential elements to interpret the absolute content of the right recognized in Article 24(2) of the Spanish Constitution, the disregard of which would constitute an indirect infringement of the fundamental right by the Spanish authorities."\(^\text{40}\)

After examining the case law of the ECHR (including more case law than the Court of Justice mentions in its judgment) and that of Court of Justice, the Tribunal concludes that these interpretations "coincide to a large extent" and can therefore provide it with the interpretative criteria to decide the case, "Hence, we must now affirm, overruling the doctrine laid down in STC 91/2000, that a conviction in absentia does not involve an infringement of the absolute contents of the fundamental right to a fair trial, even if there is no remedy for the absent defendant, when this absence has been voluntarily and unambiguously decided by a defendant who was duly summoned, and has been effectively defended by an appointed Lawyer (Article 24.2 of the Spanish Constitution)."\(^\text{41}\)

On this basis, the Tribunal rejects the appeal, considering that the Audiencia Nacional had established on the basis of an examination of the documents that legal counsel appointed by Melloni had not stopped representing him, while voluntarily waiving his right to be present at the hearings at all instances; hence, it had decided to surrender Melloni without infringing the requirements derived from the absolute content of this fundamental right under the Spanish Constitution.

This judgment of the Tribunal was accompanied by three concurring opinions, to which reference is made only briefly in the comments below.

---

\(^{\text{39}}\) References to STC 1/2004, of December 13, §14.

\(^{\text{40}}\) TC Melloni, p.163, p.24.

\(^{\text{41}}\) TC Melloni, p.56.
Primacy of non-directly effective EU law—setting aside primary EU law?

From Slo Gend & Loss onwards, the doctrine of direct effect has been a judicial invention. There is only one exception to this: the text of the EU Treaty from Maastricht until Lisbon originally provided that framework decisions “shall not entail direct effect” (art.54(2)(b) EU Treaty (2006)). However, after Lisbon, this qualification still applies to the law framework decision (including the amending Framework Decision 2009/299) under the primary law of Protocol 36 to the Lisbon Treaty.51 Holding that non-directly effective EU law entails the duty to set aside national law is something of a revolution in EU law, and may amount to setting aside primary law. This deserves closer scrutiny.

There has been some controversy in the literature over how direct effect and primary law relate to each other. Apart from quasi-metaphysical views of EU law as inherently superior to national law, there is a narrower and a broader notion of primary law. The narrower notion, in line with Costa v ENEL and the language of Sommerset66, is that primacy of EU law is essentially the duty to set aside national law in cases of conflict with EU law. The broader notion considers primary law not only as the duty to disapply national law but also to the duty to apply national law consistently with EU law.67 The narrower notion of primary law would seem to be conditional on the relevant EU law being directly effective, whereas the broader notion might also apply to EU law that is not directly effective. From the perspective of the broader notion, saying that primacy applies also to non-directly effective EU law is no big deal as long as there is no duty to set aside and cut out the national legal order. Also in this view, a real novelty, if not a revolution, would reside in Melloni if it were to entail that national law is to be set aside in favour of non-directly effective EU law. It is therefore important to establish whether that is really the case.

On its surface, Melloni does not seem to impose such a duty. The court does not refer to Sommerset and it does not use its language of “setting aside” conflicting national law. Moreover, there is a curious treatment of “primacy, unity and effectiveness” when it comes to applying this tripartite formula to the case at hand. In fact, it seems that the court applies only two of the three essential characters of EU law: unity and effectiveness. At [63], the court explains that a reading of art.53 of the Charter that would allow the Spanish higher level of protection would “cast doubts on the uniformity of the constitutional order” resulting from the Framework Decision. It does not say that it would invalidate the primacy of EU law. And this might confirm the strict formulate by various authors that art.53 of the Charter is not a clause about primacy in the first place. In what follows, I briefly go into this view, which Melloni subverts, before arguing that primacy is indeed 52 Protocol [No.36] on transitional provisions art.5. “The legal effects of the acts of the institutional bodies, bodies and agencies and the national actions adopted pursuant to the Treaties which are in force in the State or region of the Treaty are to be respected and those acts are repealed, amended or amended in implementation of the Treaties.”

53 From the decision of the European Court of Justice, article 53 of the Charler of the EU: “…the Lisbon Treaty…for the purposes of a new set of Treaties, shall be preserved and those acts are repealed, amended or amended in implementation of the Treaties.”
54 Also known as “indirect effect”, both regards direct or non-direct effective EU law, e.g. in Criminal Procedure against Nypers (C-156/03) [2005] ECR I-5280; (2005) 2 CMLR 85, see R. Leitner and T. Cuntz, “The Role of and Bridges, the Role of Pramacy in Avoiding Barriers of EU law” (2006) 31 E.J. Rev. 207.
on the basis of either EU law, both primary and secondary, as interpreted by the court. This means that fundamental freedoms, as recognized, in their respective fields of application, as interpreted by the Court, at least since the Charter acquired primary status, must be considered the reference of art.53 and therefore the primary and fundamental freedoms as recognized by at least since the Charter acquired primary status, must be considered the reference of art.53 and therefore the primary and secondary law, must surely be subject to the superior primary law of the Charter. In other words, owing to its superior rank under EU law, the Charter can necessarily qualify secondary law’s primary, just as it can qualify its applicability and validity.

The fact is, of course, that Melloni sweeps aside any doubts that art.53 of the Charter might raise about primacy, whether they were intended or not. As in Winner Wetten, the court switches into a different mode when it thinks that primacy might be interfered with. Although in [63] of Melloni, the court seems only to have an eye to “unity” (“uniformity”) and “effectiveness” (“efficacy”), it frames the totality of the argument in terms of primacy. Its answer to the question on art.53 immediately presents the conclusion that the interpretation suggested by the Spanish Constitutional Court “would undermine the principle of the primacy of EU law as much as it would allow a Member State to disobey EU legal rules which are fully in compliance with the Charter where they infringe the fundamental rights guaranteed by that State’s Constitution” [64]. It is next states that it is “by virtue of the principle of primacy of EU law” [65] that rules of national law, even of a constitutional order, cannot be allowed to undermine the effectiveness of (non-directly effective) EU law. Moreover, Melloni not only holds to an absolute concept of primacy, it indeed entails the duty to set aside national constitutional law. Although the court does not refer to Simmenhal, it does refer to Winner Wetten, which, if anything, only reinforces the Simmental language (arguably quite unnecessarily). In contrast, more ironic approaches such as those of Omega90 and Sign Wittgenstein,91 the ruling in Winner Wetten introduces the polemic term of “costing effect”, which the court found to be entailed by both primacy and the duty of Union loyalty of Member States (in Winner Wetten, more specifically, the German Federal Constitutional Court). Winner Wetten may well be read as an act of open warfare,92 and Melloni may well be considered its continuation in a more evenly constitutional context. Winner Wetten concerned the prospective overruling of Lander legislation on the basis of the general principle of legal certainty. Melloni concerns the core of a constitutional fundamental right in a particular Member State. In Winner Wetten, primacy is explicitly the primacy of directly effective secondary EU law, which has an “outlawing effect” regarding national law, even if that “outlawing” creates a legal void and legal uncertainty. Melloni is about non-directly effective EU law. Thus, the reference to Winner Wetten [and International Handelsgesellschaft] implies that this type of EU law also has the effect of setting aside national law, in the sense that the Spanish norm concerning the rights of the defence of a person convicted in absence must be disallowed, even if the court did not need to say this in so many words in Melloni.

Fields of application and “primacy, unity and effectiveness”

At first glance similar to art.53 ECHR and art.2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which stipulate that the protection afforded by those international instruments cannot do away with the protection of fundamental rights provided at national level, art.53 of the Charter is dissimilar as regards the addition of the expression “in their respective fields of application”:

Melloni judgment clarifies what this means in as much as it recognises that when Member State authorities implement EU law, they are also bound by national fundamental rights provisions.

“where an EU legal act calls for national implementing measures, national authorities and courts remain free to apply national standards of protection of fundamental rights,”93

So, in the court’s view, the scope of EU law and that of national constitutional law overlap in the case of implementation of EU law. When implementing EU law, Member State authorities both at square within the scope of EU law and are also subject to national standards: the fields of application overlap, and both national and EU fundamental rights standards apply.

This approach of the court gainsays interpretations which suggested that each of the fundamental rights sources only apply within their own ambit, so that the matter of “higher level of protection” would not be a matter of conflict, but rather one of delimiting the respective fields of competence which are essentially juxtaposed, each unique within its own sphere and to which separate standards apply. A suggestion along these lines in the Opinion of AG. Betz is clearly rejected by the court.

The court adds that such an application of national higher standards is, however, dependent on two conditions. The first is that the national standard can only apply if it does not fall below the standard of the Charter, “provided that the level of protection provided for by the Charter, as interpreted by the Court... is not thereby compromised.”94 This condition is self-evident and not problematic: the Charter is a minimum standard and does not obstruct a national standard providing protection over and above the Charter standard.

The second condition specifies, however, that the national standard can only apply “provided that... the primacy, unity and effectiveness of EU law are not thereby compromised.”95 If the application of a national standard would compromise the “primacy, unity and effectiveness” of EU law, the EU standard is the maximum standard, which sets aside national standards even if they are higher: This second condition merits further reflection, but I first make some remarks on the cases of co-applicability of national and EU standards.

If there is sufficient discretion for Member States in the implementation of EU law—or if EU law otherwise allows for diversity—primacy, unity and effectiveness are not at stake. Such discretion and diversity exist when a directive can be implemented in various ways, such as in cases of minimum harmonisation, or explicit references to national standards;96 or if primary law allows for differentiation on the basis of national standards, as in the case of freedom of movement rights.97 Another example close to the issues at stake in Melloni is the “public policy” exception in secondary law as we find it in the area of civil law in the Brussels I Regulation, which can be invoked to refuse recognition of a judgment “if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought.46 The Court has held that the court must be of the opinion that this is "of such a nature that this must be regarded as essential in the legal order of the State in which enforcement is sought or of a right recognised as being fundamental within that legal order."47 This clearly sets a limit to the mutual recognition of private law judgments.48 Similarly, the text of the Framework Decision Regulation itself. It may seem paradoxical but, in the private law context, the "public policy" exception is stronger than the appeal to the core of a constitutional right in public law. Were the Spanish Constitutional Court’s case law on criminal law verdicts in absence to apply to judgments in default in private law, this would be without any problem whatsoever. Private law "public policy" is paradoxically a stronger ground for exceptions to mutual recognition than public law "public policy."

The "primary, unity and effectiveness" exception to fundamental rights applies only when a piece of EU law at stake applies or should apply uniformly throughout the European Union. This leads us to reflect on the threshold expression "primary, unity and effectiveness", which is contained in Meloni and has rarely been used before,49 and has the potential to become a magic formula.50 The novelty of the formula here resides in the element of "unity" in combination with primary and effectiveness—a renovation of the more classic expressions "uniformity" or "uniform effect."

Semantically, the difference might be significant, since "the unity of EU law is not immediately at stake if there is no "uniformity."

The best example of this may be in the field of public interest exceptions to the free movement provisions, as found in Orgone, where the court held that unity in the protection of fundamental rights that restrict free movement is not required.51 This is not, however, cause for optimism about the constitutional diversity which the court allows in the Union, by speaking of "unity" rather than "uniformity": one swallow does not make a summer.

First, the court itself, within two paragraphs, switches back from the "unity" of EU law at [40] to the "uniformity" of EU law at [41]—which is the language of 1970 (Internationale Handelsgeellschaft). Secondly, in contrast to that of the economic free movement rights, the context of secondary legislation is different. The relevant provisions of the EAW Framework Decision can be interpreted in Meloni require "uniformity", rather than "unity": as we saw, the possibility of allowing fundamental rights exceptions in the application of the relevant provisions is rejected. The court's explanation is that the Framework Decision aims to establish uniformity, and that the court takes at face value: no cases covered by the letter of art.4(e)(1) of the Framework Decision could ever be an infringement of a fundamental right. This uncharitable acceptance of 46 Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters [2001] O.J.L.32/1, art.2.6 under (1): "A judgment shall not be recognised: if, in such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

47 Trade Agency [C-169/10] September 6, 2012 at [51].
48 A digital full-text search in English in the publicly accessible case law of the ECJ on "primary unity and effectiveness" leads to the result that it was not used in this particular combination prior to Meloni, and that it has never been used in Singapore (2002/23/EC) March 16, 2014 at [32]; in the expressions "unity and effectiveness" (of community law or Union law) was used in Commission v Help (C-18/05) [2007] ECR I-2599; [1984] 3 CMLR, at [11]; Mioara Hladik (C-49/95) with [1998] 4 CMLR, at [12]. A similar approach has been adopted in the Regulation 44/2001 on the European Judicial Network in Civil Matters (2008/536) [2009] ECR I-3249, at [20]. The "unity of European Union law" was used in Azzurra Nobile Cerchione and Azuso Chemicals v Commission (C-556/07) [2009] 5 CMLR, 19 at [11], and in the fundamental and specific character of Commission v France (C-576/01) [2003] 11 CMLR, September 19, 2013 at [58].
50 This would be analogous to the distinction made by A.G. Kohler in his Opinion in Struck (C-575/92) [1994] 15 CMLR, at [39], between the concept of “the unity and consistency” of EU law as a general legal background on art.276(2) and (3) of TFUE. "It must be found that the unity of Union law is absolutely affiixed, in particular, where fundamental rights have inherent rules or principles of EU law which have particular importance whereas the consistency of European Union law is absolutely affected where the General Court has encountered existing case-law of the European Union Courts."
51 See Orgone [C-26/02] [2004] ECR I-1609.

The difference between the legislators' stated aims is increased by the work of constitutional conflict. Thus, it may be granted that there are, at least in the abstract, some differences that can be traced between the language of the Framework Decision and the case law of the ECHR. The difference between the "an unequivocal waiver of the right to be present at trial and a 'voluntary and unqualified' waiver" was pointed out above. Similarly, the text of the Framework Decision itself. It may seem paradoxical but, in the private law context, the "public policy" exception is stronger than the appeal to the core of a constitutional right in public law. Were the Spanish Constitutional Court's case law on criminal law verdicts in absence to apply to judgments in default in private law, this would be without any problem whatsoever. Private law "public policy" is paradoxically a stronger ground for exceptions to mutual recognition than public law "public policy."

The "primary, unity and effectiveness" exception to fundamental rights applies only when a piece of EU law at stake applies or should apply uniformly throughout the European Union. This leads us to reflect on the threshold expression "primary, unity and effectiveness", which is contained in Meloni and has rarely been used before, and has the potential to become a magic formula. The novelty of the formula here resides in the element of "unity" in combination with primary and effectiveness—a renovation of the more classic expressions "uniformity" or "uniform effect."

Semantically, the difference might be significant, since "the unity of EU law is not immediately at stake if there is no "uniformity."
The best example of this may be in the field of public interest exceptions to the free movement provisions, as found in Orgone, where the court held that unity in the protection of fundamental rights that restrict free movement is not required. This is not, however, cause for optimism about the constitutional diversity which the court allows in the Union, by speaking of "unity" rather than "uniformity": one swallow does not make a summer.

First, the court itself, within two paragraphs, switches back from the "unity" of EU law at [40] to the "uniformity" of EU law at [41]—which is the language of 1970 (Internationale Handelsgeellschaft). Secondly, in contrast to that of the economic free movement rights, the context of secondary legislation is different. The relevant provisions of the EAW Framework Decision can be interpreted in Meloni require "uniformity", rather than "unity": as we saw, the possibility of allowing fundamental rights exceptions in the application of the relevant provisions is rejected. The court's explanation is that the Framework Decision aims to establish uniformity, and that the court takes at face value: no cases covered by the letter of art.4(e)(1) of the Framework Decision could ever be an infringement of a fundamental right. This uncharitable acceptance of 46 Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (2001) O.J.L.32/1, art.2.6 under (1): "A judgment shall not be recognised: if, in such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy in the Member State in which recognition is sought.

47 Trade Agency [C-169/10] September 6, 2012 at [51].
48 A digital full-text search in English in the publicly accessible case law of the ECJ on "primary unity and effectiveness" leads to the result that it was not used in this particular combination prior to Meloni, and that it has never been used in Singapore (2002/23/EC) March 16, 2014 at [32]; in the expressions "unity and effectiveness" (of community law or Union law) was used in Commission v Help (C-18/05) [2007] ECR I-2599; [1984] 3 CMLR, at [11]; Mioara Hladik (C-49/95) with [1998] 4 CMLR, at [12]. A similar approach has been adopted in the Regulation 44/2001 on the European Judicial Network in Civil Matters (2008/536) [2009] ECR I-3249, at [20]. The "unity of European Union law" was used in Azzurra Nobile Cerchione and Azuso Chemicals v Commission (C-556/07) [2009] 5 CMLR, 19 at [11], and in the fundamental and specific character of Commission v France (C-576/01) [2003] 11 CMLR, September 19, 2013 at [58].
50 This would be analogous to the distinction made by A.G. Kohler in his Opinion in Struck (C-575/92) [1994] 15 CMLR, at [39], between the concept of “the unity and consistency” of EU law as a general legal background on art.276(2) and (3) TFUE. "It must be found that the unity of Union law is absolutely affiixed, in particular, where fundamental rights have inherent rules or principles of EU law which have particular importance whereas the consistency of European Union law is absolutely affected where the General Court has encountered existing case-law of the European Union Courts."
51 See Orgone [C-26/02] [2004] ECR I-1609.
Solidarity
77 cannot do intentions itself constitutional situation was similar Constitutional
right
A suffer an failure
in This would objection
the failure
of Spain
Spain
to European Council's (i.e., the European Court), has an fundamental and outspoken constitutional conflict between European
Court of Human Rights defense
the Council's (i.e., the Member State government) intentions with the
in the or the practice
in the European Union
to its respect under art.42(1) TSE, such defense
is problematic:
A different way to look at the court's silence on the issue of constitutional identity is that this can be an option out of future constitutional conflict in the context of art.53 of the Charterte. This would lead to a quite different understanding of primacy: although EU primacy is the "normal" case of a conflict between a national and an EU constitutional standards, this would expose identity
to
Member State; and this escape route of constitutional identity is left open in Melliote.29
This shows that the Member State's Constitutional Court, in exercising its primacy or not, requires a deeper analysis of national constitutional identity and is an example of how national constitutional identity is at stake. In this last case, it is not art.53 of the 29 M. Böhler, "Landstron, Två avhandlingar om en närmare förståelse av national- och internationella domstolens uppgift vad belagt av det nationella och det internationella rättsrummet" in U. Schmitt, "Die Gleichheit vor dem along those lines, see L. Bruckfeld, "Multiple Political Identities: Reverting the "Maximum Standard" in Aleksandrov Silova (ed), Citizenship and Solidarity in the European Union — from the Charter of Fundamental Rights to the Core, the State of the Art, E. Schexner Series (Bruxelles/Bruxelles: Peter Lang, 2013). pp.248-249.

The norms concerning fundamental rights and liberties recognized by the Constitution shall be interpreted in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

28 Whether this is to be understood as an exception to primacy or not, see L. Bincik, National Constitutional (2010)] and R. Diederichs, "European Constitutional Law in an International Perspective: The Italian Constitutional Court in Melliote. And, clearly, there is no equivalence whatsoever between the Spanish constitutional case law as it stood before Melliote and the European Arrest Warrant as interpreted by the Court of Justice.

The judicial dialogue
The Court of Justice's Melliote judgment has been received critically in the literature, in particular as regards the quality of the court's reasoning, which has been characterized by one German scholar with epitaphs such as "a too global analysis", "astonishing", "again an inadequate approach of the problem", "unfounded", "half-hearted". On the quality of the judicial dialogue in the part of the Court of Justice, a Spanish scholar cautiously remarked that "the institutional capacity shown by the court is equivalent to that of a potato"; he remarked on "the striking absence of a balanced assessment of the arguments put forward by the referring court, which is a prerequisite of legal empathy": "if there is any clear manifestation of deafness or the Aipperger syndrome of the Court of Justice, it is this." However, the reproach of a refusal to engage in a serious dialogue was made to the Spanish Constitutional Court too, notably in the concurring opinion of Judge Encarnación Roca Trías in the follow-up judgment, in which she complained that the majority failed to engage in "an effective and not merely aparent judicial dialogue".

The series of judicial utterances in Melliote ended with the Spanish Constitutional Court generally lowering the standard of protection previously provided by art.24 of the Spanish Constitution, both in cases of surrender within the European Union and in cases of extradition to any other non-EU state. The Constitutional Court found a basis for doing so in an Spanish provision of the Spanish Constitution, which provides that:

"The norms concerning fundamental rights and liberties recognized by the Constitution shall be interpreted in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights."
This provision—art.10(1) of the Constitution—also takes on board EU law whenever that is relevant to the Spanish legal order. As the Court of justice acknowledged in its considerations of the admissibility issue, it is precisely in the autonomous interpretation by the Spanish Constitutional Court of the meaning of the Spanish Constitution's provisions relevant to the Melloni case that the Court of Justice's interpretation of the Charter and the RAM Framework Decision comes in; that is to say, within the autonomous interpretation by the Constitutional Court of national constitutional law.

This setting can also explain why the Constitutional Court found it legitimate to "supplement" its interpretation of the Constitution with its remarks about the prevalence of the Spanish Constitution in cases where EU law would conflict with it. For all intents and purposes, this means that if EU law conflicts with the fundamental rights standard of the Spanish Constitution, and this conflict cannot be solved otherwise, the latter will prevail. In sum, the interpretation of art.5.1 of the Charter by the Court of Justice in Melloni will not, if it really came to it, be followed by the Constitutional Court. That this is not a forcible interpretation of the Constitutional Court's final judgment in Melloni is witnessed by the concurring opinion of Justice Encarnación Roca Trías, which criticizes the majority precisely for making this interpretation at least possible if not the only one intended. For her, the dialogue would have been successful if the Constitutional Court had simply accepted and followed the line of reasoning of the Court of Justice, even though that would seem to be the one-way traffic of "obeisance" rather than a pluralistic "dialogue".

The degree of principled judicial disobedience compensates for the judicial obedience and compliance in lowering the protection provided by what allegedly was the core of a constitutional right. A more "dialectic" element in the Constitutional Court's judgment inheres in its statement that "in the unlikely case" of a hypothetical infringement by EU law of the Spanish Constitution which "is not remedied by the ordinary channels provided [by EU law]", the Constitutional Court would have to respect the principle of popular sovereignty and its expression in the Spanish Constitution. This is another way of saying "Court of Justice, be sensitive and responsive to the implosion of values of national constituions!" Evidently, the Constitutional Court found that the Court of Justice's judgment in Melloni necessitated the making of such a remark.

The particular dynamics of the "dialogue" in Melloni may, on the part of the Court of Justice, perhaps be understood in the absence of clear Strasbourg case law concerning mutual recognition in the context of trial in absentia that would have given support to the point of the earlier Spanish constitutional case law. Under such circumstances, the court was ready for a conflict with an embedded constitutional court like the Spanish, which is pretty much in competition with ordinary Spanish courts. That the Court of Justice is not likely to do the same with more powerful constitutional courts, like the Bundesverfassungsgericht, is shown by its case law on data protection, a legal field that the German Federal Constitutional Court has declared to concern its constitutional identity at an early stage in its data retention judgment.

Conclusion

The Preliminary to the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights states that the Union "places the individual at the heart of its activities." That is not apparent from the Court of Justice's judgment in Melloni. The court was evidently less concerned with protecting the fundamental rights of individuals granted by primary law than with safeguarding the intentions of the legislatures, notably governments, when they made secondary legislation. Its sheer concern for the primacy of secondary law, even though it was not directly effective, led it to a mode of judging which is more like that of making a statement than that of careful consideration of various arguments. As the court's later judgment in Singhv makes clear in an obiter dictum, citing Melloni as authority, the objective of fundamental rights protection is not the concern for the rights of the individual but "the need to avoid a situation in which the level of protection of fundamental rights varies according to national law, even if it is not direct to the infringement of European law; and the protection of the rights of the individual by the European Communities is not affected." So the Preliminary to the Charter was wrong: it is not rights themselves that are important, primacy is, in reality. Fifty years after Costa v ENEL, the court settles for absolute primacy as a greater concern than substantive rights. It is not the citizens and his rights that move the court; it is the primacy of EU law over national law, even non-directive effective EU law over national constitutional law.

On the more specific legal context of art.53 of the Charter, we in the meantime have to wonder what Melloni has brought. Although it has been suggested that the main purpose of this provision was that "existing regimes should not be applied and interpreted 'downwards' by invoking the language of the Charter", this is precisely what the interpretation of art.53 of the Charter in Melloni effected: the interpretation "downwards" of the rights of the defendant under the Spanish Constitution by the Spanish Constitutional Court, which considered itself forced to do so under the influence of the Court of Justice's interpretation of the rights of defence under the Charter. For the moment, this has avoided overt constitutional conflict, but new material for an outbreak of such conflict is provided by the Court of Justice in Melloni itself.

Might there still be a way out? I agree with some commentators that the issue of constitutional identity provides one way out, although there are clear objections as to the manner in which this was (or rather: was not) handled in Melloni. Instead of the language of some 40 or 50 years ago, when EU law still needed to establish itself in the Member State legal orders, the court would at any rate have to revert to the different, more mature, subtle, balanced and nuanced ways of Omega and Sony-Wittgenstein—however, the chances of its doing so seem somehow reduced after Melloni.

In terms of the general constitutional situation in Europe, we may understand this state of affairs in terms of shifts within constitutional paradigms. The paradigm of rights prevailing in post-war Western European States, and in Middle and Eastern European Member States since the fall of the Berlin Wall, is in the context of European integration shaped by the paradigm that dominated the "long 19th century" of European constitutionalism, that of power allocation: the assertion of primacy is the main concern of the Court of Justice not only in the age of the early establishment of EU law (the 1960s and 1970s) but even in the 21st century. This may explain the strongly doctrinaire reflex in Melloni that fits into a line of more or less recent cases like Wallner Witten, of which the polemic tone contrasts with the more ironic, accommodating and conciliatory approach of Omega and Sony-Wittgenstein. It may also be an indication that the constitutional paradigm of the 21st century will unavoidably be that of neither rulers nor powers in the exclusive terms it had in the 19th century, but that of relations between constitutional orders.

48. Singhv (C-206/13) March 6, 2014 at [31]-[32].
49. See White, "Article 53 of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights (2014)", 2014
50. This can be easily illustrated with the Italian Constitutional Court in Prigna (Case No.214/99) April 12, 1999.
51. Most recently, Digital Rights Ireland’s Minister for Communications, Marine and Natural Resources (C-297/12 and C- 549/11) April 6, 2013.

European Current Law Issue 10 2014