FOREWORD ................................................................................................................. 14

GENERAL INTRODUCTION ....................................................................................... 19
  1.1 EARLIER RESEARCH ON PREPARATORY LAYERS FOR OIL PAINTING ......................... 20
  1.1.1 Research into historic documents ........................................................................ 20
  1.1.2 The evolution of source research: developments in source research methodology .................................... 24
  1.1.3 Reconstructions for the investigation of preparatory layers ....................................... 26
  1.1.4 The start of scientific investigations of preparatory layers ........................................ 28
  1.1.5 From the 1970s onwards: more combinations of recipe research and instrumental analysis 29
  1.1.6 The achievements and limitations of previous research ........................................... 33
  1.2 THE CENTRAL AIMS OF THIS THESIS ...................................................................... 35
  1.3 RESEARCH METHODOLOGY .................................................................................. 37
  1.4 STRUCTURE OF THE DISSERTATION ....................................................................... 40

PART I: DESCRIPTION OF THE RECIPE DATASET AND ANALYSIS OF THE RECIPES ........................................................................................................ 43

CHAPTER 2 THE RECIPE COLLECTION, THE AUTHORS AND THE IMPACT OF THE RECIPES ........................................................................................................ 45
  2.1 THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE RECIPE COLLECTION .................................................. 45
  2.2 SIZE AND SCOPE OF THE RECIPE COLLECTION .......................................................... 46
  2.3 THE CHARACTER OF THE SOURCES ......................................................................... 53
  2.4 THE AUDIENCES OF RECIPE BOOKS ....................................................................... 59
  2.5 THOUGHTS ON TEXTUAL ANALYSIS ....................................................................... 63
  2.6 COPIES, REPETITIONS, TRANSLATIONS AND LATER EDITIONS .............................. 64
  2.7 CONCLUDING REMARKS ....................................................................................... 65

CHAPTER 3 PREPARATORY LAYERS FOR OIL PAINTING; THEIR TERMINOLOGY AND FUNCTION ............................................................................................ 67
  3.1 THE PREPARATORY SYSTEM ................................................................................. 67
  3.1.1 The purpose of the preparatory system ................................................................... 71
  3.1.2 The size layer ....................................................................................................... 72
  3.1.3 The ground layers; fillers and pigments ................................................................. 72
  3.1.4 Isolation layers ..................................................................................................... 73
  3.1.5 The ‘Imprimatura’, the ‘primuersel’, the ‘imprimeur’ and the ‘priming’ .................... 74
  3.2 APPLICATIONS TO THE REVERSE OF THE SUPPORT ............................................ 75
10.2.3 Nineteenth century concerns about the effect of lead white ........................................236
10.3 THE INFLUENCE OF GROUND COLOUR .....................................................................238
10.4 THE INFLUENCE OF GROUND ABSORBENCY .............................................................244
10.4.1 The stability of aqueous grounds and their role in preventing paint discolouration ....244
10.4.2 Doubts about the absorbent qualities of chalk and glue grounds ..........................249
10.4.3 The absorbency of grounds available commercially in the nineteenth century .....251
10.4.4 The influence of ground absorbency on painting technique .................................252
10.4.5 Modifying ground absorbency: isolation layers, combinations of absorbent and non- absorbent layers and relatively absorbent emulsions ..................................................253
10.5 THE DEGRADATION OF OIL-BASED GROUND LAYERS .............................................255
10.5.1 The importance of a well-dried oil ground for long-term stability .........................257
10.6 PROTECTING THE REVERSE SIDE OF THE SUPPORT ................................................258
10.6.1 Applications to the reverse of the panel ..................................................................259
10.6.2 Applications to the reverse of canvas supports .....................................................260
10.7 CONCLUDING REMARKS .........................................................................................261

PART II: RECONSTRUCTION-BASED STUDIES OF RECIPES ...................................... 265

INTRODUCTION TO PART II ............................................................................................. 267

CHAPTER 11 SIZE LAYERS FOR OIL PAINTING IN WESTERN EUROPEAN SOURCES (1500-1900). HISTORICAL RECIPES AND RECONSTRUCTIONS ...... 269

11.1 INTRODUCTION ........................................................................................................... 269
11.2 ANIMAL GLUE AS A HISTORIC SIZE LAYER MATERIAL ........................................... 269
11.3 RECONSTRUCTIONS OF GLUE SIZE LAYERS FOR CANVAS PAINTING ......................... 270
11.3.1 Reconstruction details ............................................................................................. 270
11.3.2 The chemistry of animal glue preparation ................................................................ 271
11.3.3 Reconstruction results: influence of raw material .................................................. 272
11.3.4 Reconstruction results: effects of preparation variables ......................................... 272
11.3.5 Reconstructions: application to canvas .................................................................... 273
11.4 RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN RECIPES AND RECONSTRUCTIONS .............................. 276
11.5 EVALUATION ............................................................................................................... 277

CHAPTER 12 FLOUR PASTE IN RECIPES FOR PREPARATORY LAYERS FOR OIL PAINTING, 1550-1900 ......................................................................................... 279

12.1 INTRODUCTION ........................................................................................................... 279
12.2 METHODOLOGY ........................................................................................................ 280
12.3 TEXTUAL ANALYSIS OF HISTORICAL RECIPES THAT INCLUDE FLOUR OR STARCH IN PREPARATORY LAYERS ................................................................. 281
12.3.1 Ingredients .............................................................................................................. 281
12.3.2 Historical paste preparation methods ................................................................. 281
12.4 FLOUR AND STARCH: VARIETIES, PRODUCTION METHODS AND TRADE .............. 282
12.4.1 Historical descriptions of the type of flour employed ........................................... 282
12.4.2 Characteristics of historical wheat ......................................................................... 283
12.4.3 Grain characteristics of wheat and rye ................................................................. 284
12.4.4 Cereal milling and sieving ..................................................................................... 285
12.5 HISTORICAL STARCH PRODUCTION ...................................................................... 286
12.5.1 Historical production methods for wheat and rye starch: from flour or from grains. ....286
12.5.2 The role of fermentation ......................................................................................... 287
CHAPTER 16  GENERAL CONCLUSIONS ................................................................. 349

16.1  THE APPROACH: RECIPE ANALYSIS, RECONSTRUCTIONS, COMPARISON WITH PAINTINGS .................................................. 349
  16.2.1  Recipes for preparatory layers: from a fragmented image to continuity .................................................. 350
  16.2.2  Reconstructions for the interpretation of recipes and for comparisons with actual paintings .................. 350

16.2  AUTHORS’ INTENTIONS AND ARTISTS’ MOTIVES .......................................................... 353
  16.2.1  The character of the source and its influence on the type of advice provided ........................................ 353
  16.2.2  Recipes as a source of information about artists’ intentions and fears ................................................. 354

16.3  RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FURTHER RESEARCH ......................................................... 356
  16.3.1  A final word ......................................................................................................................... 358

ABSTRACT ....................................................................................................................... 363

LIST OF TABLES AND FIGURES IN THE MAIN TEXT .................................................. 368

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF SECONDARY LITERATURE ....................................................... 374

An annotated bibliography of historical sources is found in Volume 2, Appendix 2.
