

UvA-DARE (Digital Academic Repository)

TTIP's regulatory cooperation framework and its democratic implications

Bartl, M.

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Bartl, M. (Author). (2015). TTIP's regulatory cooperation framework and its democratic implications. Web publication/site, BlogActiv. Retrieved from <http://acelg.blogactiv.eu/2015/02/08/ttip%e2%80%99s-regulatory-cooperation-framework-and-its-democratic-implications/>

General rights

It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations

If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: <https://uba.uva.nl/en/contact>, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

TTIP's regulatory cooperation framework and its democratic implications

February 8, 2015

by Marija Bartl

One of the issues on the agenda of the forthcoming workshop 'Why TTIP? On its rationale, institutions and substantive areas', taking place at the UVA on the 17th February 2015, are the democratic implications of TTIP's regulatory cooperation framework. Alberto Alemmano, a visiting scholar of Access Europe and one of the most outspoken commentators on the topic, will present his ideas on regulatory cooperation (see, for instance, here), followed by rejoinders by several commentators (see programme and presentations).

Even if the TTIP would not have a set of institutions directly making law and thereby interfering with the regulatory process of the state parties (see Alemmano's recent blog), two more indirect avenues are envisaged for shaping the respective domestic regulatory process. On the one hand, the TTIP will juridify certain 'better regulation' principles, such as transparency, consultation or impact assessment, thereby opening the regulatory process to the gaze and input of the other state party and, more importantly, their stakeholders. On the other hand, the TTIP will put in place a set of formal institutions (such as a Regulatory Council and sectorial committees, see here). Here regulators, experts and eventually trade officials will come together and, with the input of stakeholders, propose, first, a yearly (de)regulatory agenda for eliminating 'behind the borders obstacles to trade' and, second, socialize into using similar regulatory techniques and methodologies.

The question that we aim to answer in this workshop is the following. If the purpose of the agreement is to change the 'mindset' of regulators (rather than produce formal law), what are the possible democratic implications thereof? In other words, what will be the broader discursive impact of the TTIP's 'light' institutional structure on the democratic debate in both the EU and the US?

Dr. Marija Bartl works as assistant professor at the Centre for the Study of European Contract Law, University of Amsterdam, and as senior researcher at the Architecture of Post-National Rule-Making project.

Author : acelg