

UvA-DARE (Digital Academic Repository)

Shared questions, diverging answers: Muḥammad ‘Abduh and his interlocutors on ‘religion’ in a globalizing world

Kateman, A.

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Kateman, A. (2016). Shared questions, diverging answers: Muḥammad ‘Abduh and his interlocutors on ‘religion’ in a globalizing world.

General rights

It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations

If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: <https://uba.uva.nl/en/contact>, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

Acknowledgements

Muḥammad ‘Abduh’s texts bear the traces of a variety of contemporaries with whom he was in contact; his texts were shaped through the discussions and interactions he had with many others. Largely because of this feature, his texts have kept me fascinated throughout my research – and they still do. Here, I gladly acknowledge those who made an imprint upon my own text and in conversation with whom this text was made and remade – even though my mapping of my intellectual and personal context will be inevitably incomplete.

First, I thank my supervisors Gerard Wiegers and Richard van Leeuwen for guiding the reading, thinking and writing that led to this dissertation. You asked many thoughtful questions, but refrained from imposing answers; thank you for putting an unflinching trust in me, even in trying times. I look forward to continuing our conversations and I am specifically grateful to Richard for making this possible. Since my first classes in Arabic and Islamic history and culture over ten years ago, I have greatly enjoyed talking with you and learning from you.

Many others have been of great support to my research and myself. I am particularly grateful to the Netherlands Inter-university School for Islamic Studies. I thank NISIS not only for generously funding this research project, but I also thank the members of the NISIS board and its bureau in particular (Léon Buskens, Petra de Bruijn, Annemarie, Farah, Femke and many others) for creating a wonderful environment for a young generation of scholars of Islam in the Netherlands to flourish. The seasonal schools were a safe but inspiring environment for discussing my ideas with senior and junior scholars.

I also benefited from the conversations I had with others. I am grateful for the academic counsel and practical support I received, in person or through e-mail, from père Georges Berbary, Maaïke van Berkel, Marilyn Booth, Nadia Bou Ali, Johann Büssow, Islam Dayeh, Anne-Laure Dupont, Marwa Elshakry, Indira Falk Gesink, Dahlia Gubara, Mona Hegazy, Emad Helal, Bernard Heyberger, Hanco Jürgens, Sudipta Kaviraj, James Kennedy, Tarif al-Khalidi, Michiel Leezenberg, Koen van Lieshout, Hisham Nashabe, Ruud Peters, Umar Ryad, Stephan Schmid, Souad Slim, Dorothe Sommer, Siep Stuurman, Markha Valenta, Shuang Wen, but also from all the kind people at ASH (previously ICH) and the department of Religious Studies. Similarly, I valued the conversations I had at conferences, symposia and lectures, which helped me sharpen my ideas and arguments. In particular, I was happy to discuss concepts of time and progress at the symposium I co-organized with Judith and Richard in Beirut, in co-operation with the unfortunately discontinued Netherlands Institute Beirut and the inspiring Orient-Institut Beirut (especially Stefan Knost). The many fates of the notion of Islamic predestination were the fruitful topic of panel discussions at the BRISMES conference in 2014 and the ACMES conference in 2014. The questions and remarks of the organizers and participants of the conference in Leiden on philological encounters aided my thinking about the nature of a global conversation. The department of Islamic and Arabic Studies of the Utrecht University were kind enough to invite me to discuss matters of methodology in intellectual history with them. I am thankful to all of my past interlocutors and I look forward to discussing my ideas with the members of my doctoral committee at March 4, whom I would like to thank for their time and effort in critically reading my dissertation and drafting undoubtedly challenging questions.

In addition, invaluable assistance was offered by the library and archival staff of the AUB, the Bibliothèque Orientale of the USJ, Balamand University, Dār al-Kutub, Dār al-Wathā'iq, AUC, Collège de Saint Famille Cairo, IDEO Cairo, British Library, Leiden University and the University of Amsterdam. To tackle all the difficult nineteenth-century Arabic sources I found in these libraries and archives, Husayn, Majed, Nada and Manal of the Saifi Institute for Arabic in Beirut greatly helped me – just like Ashraf did back in Amsterdam. Furthermore, the Arabic dictionaries digitalized by E.J. Taal were a beacon of online support. Similarly, I could not have gone without the support and accommodation offered by NVIC and NI-Beirut, although nothing could match the splendour offered by Leonie's apartment in Zamalek. Gail Zuckerwise proofread and edited my English text at an astonishing speed – thank you so much for your efficiency and cool-headedness in those stressful last moments.

I was lucky to share the joys and challenges of being a PhD-candidate with many PhD-candidates around me, who were more often than not great friends too. I have greatly benefitted from the kind support of my fellow NISIS PhD-candidates Annemarie, Arjan, Claudia, Iis, Maryse, Mònica, Nuril, Pieter, Stijn, Sunarwoto, and Zoltan, and have enjoyed your company very much. I look forward to continuing our intellectually stimulating conversations in the future. Similarly, I enjoyed the great company of many PhD-candidates in Islamic, Arabic and/or Middle Eastern studies outside of NISIS in the Netherlands: Josephine, Judith, Nora, Rogier, Zihni; of those with whom I have shared a beautiful office over the years: Annemiek, Camille, Caroline, Claartje, Durkje, Matthijs, Nanouschka, Peter, Rindert, Suzanne, Susanne, Tamara; and of those with whom I shared all my career worries as the end neared: Marlies, Sabine and Tessa. In addition, I truly enjoyed the interesting conversations and great laughs I had along the way with my fellow historians Jan, Klaas, and Suze. Great distance did not prevent Justine from avidly discussing my research, the academic world, or society in general with me – luckily never without some life-giving irony.

Other friends have greatly eased my path as a PhD-candidate too. Roos, Claartje, Elias, Rashad, Ghina, Leonie: how you make me long for our time in Beirut and Cairo! But, luckily, home is sweet too with Anna, Anne, Bregje, Carlijn, Jiska, Laura, Liesje, Nora, Sjoerd, Thijs, Victoria on my side. I hope you know how much I like and love you all, because I am not really keen on saying so. I am very glad that two of my dear friends, Judith and Liesje, will help me intellectually prepare me for and stand beside me during the defence – and chat, dance and laugh with me afterwards.

I would like to thank my family and family-in-law for just being there. It feels wonderful to know that there is always an aunt, uncle, or nift, who cares about you no matter what. There's my talented sister-in-law Marta, whom I'd like to thank for her help in finding a fitting image for the cover; Elisabeth and Casper, for being true family; Si-Ling and Tonny, for your infinite trust and love; my sister Aïcha, for always being on my team; my sister Sanne, for just walking in; and my parents Annemarie and Wim, for leaving me free to live my life while caring for me deeply. Lastly, I would like to thank my love Young Kon. In times of joy and in times of sorrow, we carried on together, rondje voor rondje. With you, I can travel far, dive deep, think hard, laugh loud, and I always have someone to come back to. I dedicate this book to our two-year old daughter Fernande, because I love her.