ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Having finished this book, I would like to express my gratitude to everyone who supported me during my research.

The financial support from the 'National Research Program on Global Air Pollution and Climate Change I' is gratefully acknowledged.

The research project was conducted at the Interfaculty Department of Environmental Sciences (Interfacultaire Vakgroep Milieukunde, IVAM) at the University of Amsterdam. First, I would like to thank my supervisors Egbert Tellegen and Maarten Wolsink: thank you for your helpful advise, support and encouragement throughout this research project.

I would like to thank all my colleagues at the IVAM. Some of you were important in giving useful information, support, advise or in reading draft versions of the manuscript. Others were very important in creating a nice and humane working climate at the Department, which is vital for functioning well within any organization, but especially important when the organization is overhauled completely. I wish all my former colleagues that have not found a suitable position yet, the best of luck.

During the research project, it was always stimulating to know that there were other colleagues who were also writing a book. Some fellow PhD students I would like to thank for their contribution: Els Boonstra, Jan Eberg, Rini van Est, Martin Ket, Carolien Kroeze, Caroline van Leenders, Femke Reijenga and Stephan Slingerland.

I would like to thank Dominique Theunen for her help in preparing the German case study.

Finally, I would like to thank my former colleagues and good friends Brigitte Hertz and Carolien Kroeze for accepting the role of 'paranimf'.

In November 1998, I started to conduct an EU funded research project 'Creating Eco-Efficient Producer Services' at the Afdeling Algemene Vorming (Social Aspects of Science and Technology) of the Vrije Universiteit in Amsterdam. I would like to thank all of my new found colleagues for the interest they have showed in the subject of my thesis and for their patience and their faith in finishing this book. I am also very grateful for their full support. Firstly, by partly funding this book. Secondly, by the support of Mies Brookman who gave this book a proper lay out. Mies, thank you very much.

Of course I render thanks to all respondents. During different stages of the research project, several respondents were willing to share their view on the waste market and their opinion on solving waste problems. Without your help, I would not have been able to accomplish this thesis.

There were also some external persons willing to give their comments on earlier drafts. I am thankful to Annelies Huygen, Taco de Jong, Peter Renaud and Herman Huisman for their comments on Chapter 3 and/or Chapter 8.

I am very grateful to my parents, Koos de Jong and Maartje de Jong-Kramer, and my sister Anne Marie de Jong for their help. By taking care of my children, they offered me the possibility to continue working on this book.

Last but not least, I dedicate this book to my husband and children. Hendrik, Sofie and Luna, especially during the last year I had to bring along my work to home. I hope that you did not bare my company too much. I love you.

Amsterdam, October 1999.
