Honor and Emotion: the cultural shaping of pride, shame and anger
Rodriguez Mosquera, P.M.

Citation for published version (APA):
Amsterdam: UvA

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: http://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.
Acknowledgements

The PhD project that has resulted in this dissertation started on October 1994 under the supervision of Tony Manstead and Agneta Fischer. It has been a great professional and personal experience for me, and a number of people have contributed in important ways to these positive feelings.

I truly appreciate the way that Tony and Agneta have supervised me during my PhD. I thank them not only for their invaluable intellectual guidance, but also for their encouragement and kindness. They have offered me the very best support during both the ups and downs that inevitably accompany such projects, and they have also shared my enthusiasm for my research, which I found very motivating. I am very fortunate I could enjoy the supervision of two people I respect so much on a professional as well as on a personal level.

My parents, Albina and Manuel, have always provided me the means by which I could achieve my intellectual ambitions, and I thank them for that. They have also given me the opportunity to grow up in different cultures, which I believe is one of my best and most enriching life experiences. I also thank my sister, Ana, for the immediate help she gave me when I encountered serious problems in conducting one of the studies presented in this thesis. My research would have been seriously hampered without her help. Finally, I am very much indebted to my brother Manuel for his emotional support and encouragement to fulfill my goals.

I would also like to thank the following friends: Anikó, Arantxa, Didi, Khalil, Fernando, Isabel, Jan, Liling, Mónica, Paloma, Richard, Sara and Russell, for the nice times and fun I have always had with them; Alicia, for being so close when actually being physically so far; Ana, for all the emotional sharing in long faxes, letters, e-mails, and talks in Madrid; Krystyna, for her close emotional support; Lea, for being there “when the river got very narrow or the stream too fast”; Ramón, for being my soul-mate; and Tini, my “sci-fi mate” for all the genuine things we share. I thank Samia, Hanna, Umayya and Rabab for their love and friendship. I have always felt at home in your homes.

I am also grateful to Bertjan, Krystyna and Daan for making every day working at the department an enjoyable experience. Bertjan, Krystyna and I were room-mates for a long time, and I feel that they have importantly helped me to feel at home in Amsterdam. Daan became my room-mate last year and together with Krystyna they had to bear, in the last stages of writing this dissertation, my almost compulsive and daily habit of eating cheese-and-onion crisps. I have also enjoyed the friendly and inspiring environment in the Department of Social Psychology, and I have especially the emotion meeting groups with my colleagues Agneta, Anneke, Bertjan, Carien, Esther, Monique, Russell, Ruud, Tony and Wilco.

Cross-cultural research can be quite time-consuming and I would especially like to thank Pilar Carrera Levillán, Isabel Cuevas, Jose Miguel Fernández-Dols, Pilar Pérez Cantó, and Ramón Rico Muñoz, for their help in the organization of data collection in Spain. These persons' willingness to help also diminished my preoccupation with anything that “could go wrong” when conducting my research (cross-cultural research can be nerve-racking too!). I would also like to thank all the Spanish and Dutch respondents who have participated in my research. Without them this dissertation would not have become a reality.

My last thoughts go to my aunt Maria and my friend Angel, who are gone now and meant a lot to me.

Patricia

Amsterdam, August 1999
“El honor es patrimonio del alma”

Pedro Calderón de la Barca, El alcalde de Zalamea
In this dissertation, my almost compulsive and daily desire of doing empirical-oriented writing, I have also enjoyed this healthy and inspiring association with the Department of Social Psychology, and I have especially the exciting meeting groups with my intelligent Agnes, Annelie, Bertjan, Carina, Esther, Marijke, Sienafat, Reinhart, Tineke and Willy.

Conscientious research can often time-consuming and I would especially the thank Peter, Carina, Elke, Isabel, Carola, Jo, Marijke, Rembrandt, Dolf, Peter, Planet, Carina, and Reinhart for their help in the organization and data collection in Spain. During personal willingness to help also diminished my preconceptions with anything that could go wrong when conducting my empirical research and the research can be overwhelming, they. I would also like to think all the Spanish participants who were permitted in my research. Without them the research would continue to be a failure.

My final thoughts go to my family and my husband, Jan, who was always there and strongly believed in me.