ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS FOREIGN CASE STUDIES

The information gathered for the international case studies (Chapter 7) is, apart from the above-mentioned literature, the result of discussions with several academic researchers (geographers, planners, sociologists and economists) and people working in planning practice in Switzerland, Sweden and the UK.

Switzerland

First, I would like to thank the Institut de Recherche sur l’Environnement Construit (IREC), of the École Polytechnique Lausanne, my workplace during my stay in Switzerland.

Various researchers of IREC gave me valuable information on the development of Swiss population distribution, federal and cantonal physical planning, and relevant economic and societal developments. In this respect I would especially like to thank:

Michel Bassand
Lydia Bonanomi
Gilles Grosjean
Vincent Kauffmann
Daniel Kübler
Jean-Philippe Leresche
Pierre-Alain Rumley
Joelle Salomon
Philippe Thalmann

Christophe Jemelin, also working at IREC, provided technical assistance with the maps of the distribution of population growth in Switzerland (maps 5 and 6 in the Appendix).

Beatrice Hirschi, secretary of IREC, introduced me to most of the researchers of IREC and was a great help in administrative matters.

Sabine Friedrich, Institut für Orts-, Regional- und Landesplanung, Eidgenössische Technische Hochschule Zürich, gave me interesting additional tips on relevant literature and researchers.

My very special thanks go to Dominique Joye, who was my main contact person at the IREC in Lausanne and took care of workplace facilities and accommodation, and Martin Schuler, who was my most important contact person with regard to the content of my case study, arranged a number of interesting excursions and commented on a draft version of the case study report.

West Sweden

To gather information for my case study in West-Sweden. I had meetings and discussions with the following people who are all thanked kindly for the cooperation and interest:

Karin Aström, Åke Forsström, Anders Larsson and Lars Nordström, Department of Human and Economic Geography, University of Göteborg.
Håkan Rydbo and Herman Heijmans, Göteborgs Regionen Kommunalförbundet.
Rolf Hammarling, Länsstyrelsen Västra Götaland.
Berthil Johansson and Henryk Lindelof, Municipality of Malmö.
Philip Moding, Malmö.
Eric Clark, Ulf Erkandsson. Torsten Hägerstrand and Olof Wärneryd, Department of Social and Economic Geography, University of Lund.
Johan Rådberg, Department of Architecture, University of Lund.
Ulf Åberg, Region Federation Council Skåne.
Louise Nyström, Urban Environment Council.
Jan-Evert Nilsson, National Board of Housing, Building and Planning.
Ingemar Elander and Ann-Cathrin Åquist, Department of Human Geography, Högskolan of Örebro.
Roger Andersson, Department of Social and Economic Geography, University of Uppsala.
Erik Bylund, Susanne Hjort, Einar Holm, Urban Lindgren, Gunnar Malmberg, Kerstin Westin and Ulf Wiberg, Department of Social and Economic Geography, University of Umeå.
Orjan Petterson, research institute CERUM, University of Umeå.

My very special thanks go to Lars-Erik Borgegård of the Institute for Housing Research in Gävle, who not only spent several hours discussing about Sweden with me, but also introduced me to most of the people in the list above and took care of my work place and accommodation. Also, he commented on a draft version of my case study report.
Special thanks are also due to Johan Håkansson, who not only discussed with me about Swedish population distribution, but also was a great help in gathering the statistical and cartographic data I needed for my analysis.

Northern England

To gather information for my case study in Northern England, I had meetings and discussions with the following people who are all thanked kindly for the cooperation and interest:

Mark Baker, Angela Hull and Dick Williams, Department of Town & Country Planning, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne;
Cate Hammond, Department of Town & Country Planning, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, formerly working for the Council for the Protection of Rural England
Stuart Downey, Department of Geography, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Ron Todd, House Builders Federation, North East Region, Durham
Stephen Barber, North of England Assembly of local authorities, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Jim Darlington, Government Office for the North East, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
John Mortimer, Government Office for the North West, Manchester
Roger Bristow, Planning Department, University of Manchester
David Shaw, Planning Department, University of Liverpool
Ted Kitchen, School of the Built Environment, Sheffield Hallam University
Peter Bibby and Richard Stephenson, Planning Department, University of Sheffield
Trevor Hart and David Whitney, Planning Department, Leeds Metropolitan University

My very special thanks go to Tony Champion, Department of Geography, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, who provided the population data, arranged a temporary workplace in Newcastle, introduced me to the case study area and helped me contact many of the people in the list above. Also, he commented on a draft version of my case study report.
Special thanks should also go to Tania Ford for her administrative assistance, and to Ann Rooke, who provided technical assistance with the map of Northern-English population distribution (Appendix Map 8). Both are also working at the Department of Geography of the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

To conclude, my sincere thanks are also due to the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research (NWO) and the Short Term Scientific Mission programme of COST-CIVITAS, that made my travels to and stays in Switzerland, Sweden and the UK financially possible.
