There are things in life whose completion causes the greatest happiness. Writing a dissertation is one such thing. Although the four and a half years of study devoted to this project were fascinating and in many respects instructive, the presentation of the end results gives great satisfaction.

At this point, it is appropriate to express my gratitude to a few people who have been of great influence and help during the process of the study. The first to be mentioned is Prof. Dr. Karel Deurloo, my supervisor, who has stimulated me enormously with his enthusiasm, broad knowledge and exegetical intuition. He came rather close to the ideal of Socrates, who stipulated that a teacher should function as a midwife who lets the student bring forth the best of her abilities while providing correction in appropriate cases. His incessant curiosity and twinkling eyes while discussing the mysteries of the Hebrew Bible with me will remain in my thoughts.

The academic setting of the Department of Theology of the University of Amsterdam has been warm and friendly. It has been a privilege to receive financial support for studying the topic of my preference. I hope, therefore, that this book will not remain without response in the academic field but will prove to be useful and thought-provoking for scholars in the area of prophetic studies.

I would like to include in my thanks the members of the Dutch ‘Jesaja-Werkplaats’, especially the senior members, Prof. Dr. W.A.M. Beuken and Prof. Dr. H. Leene, scholars whose keen eye for textual details has provided a stimulating influence on my own work. Dr. J. Dubbink proofread the manuscript and suggested many improvements. Dr. J. Dyk has corrected my English and made many helpful comments. I am indebted to both of them.

A warm word of thanks is also due to my parents, sister and friends, who all have been helpful in their own way. The help of Maurits Verhoeff, finally, has been invaluable. In doing the layout of the book, he encountered many inconsistencies and had to solve many problems. His unfailing support and his proviso that I stop pondering exegetical details after eleven p.m. put the project into perspective and contributed greatly to my pleasure in life, more than any professional achievement ever could.
