Without my parents I would not have been here. Giving me Life and devoting much of their own lives to the happiness of their children, they are the ones that I am mostly indebted to.

If someone has to be taken responsible for my interest in science as a boy, it surely was Professor Pluis: without you I may have chosen an entirely different career (and if we would not have run out of wood, perhaps Davy and I would now be stuck on Pluto).

Bert, I am very privilieged to have had a supervisor like you. Your support and stimulation seemed inexhaustible and I hope that you feel that this thesis is also a little bit yours. The freedom and friendship that you gave has been very important. Your hospitality in Eching during my visit shortly after having moved back to Amsterdam was of a very special kind.

Rens, it must have been tough for you to manage such a stubborn person as me. But you never complained when I disappeared from time to time, and in some crucial phases you have ensured the successful completion of a large and important part of my thesis.

Teije, I hope that you do not regret having accepted the risks and responsibilities for the fate of my thesis, trusting that all would go well. The discussions that we had during the last stages of my thesis have been very educational and a real pleasure.

It has been both interesting and rewarding to work together with a large number of other colleagues and friends, notably Martin, Norman, Patricia, Cecile, Valentín, Lars-Ake and Peter. I would also like to thank Gerry for employing me in Cambridge and Alain for my visit to Paris.

I enjoyed a lot traveling to observatories and conference resorts in Chile, South Africa, Australia, Spain, Turkey, Canada and France. Meeting many beautiful and friendly people, I feel very lucky to have become friends with special persons like Carolina, Fabian, Alfredo and Snezana. You will be in my heart for ever.

The two years of living near Munich and working at the European Southern Observatory were unforgettable. Some of the wonderful people that I came to know there have proven to be among the most honest and loyal friends. Henrik, Vanessa, Karen, Greg and Lex: a few words dedicated to you here can never express my gratitude for what you have given me, especially in the times that I most needed it.

My life in Amsterdam has been somewhat chaotic and intense at times, but I could always count on Alan, Bartek and Mark, whose friendship has survived numerous soccer fights and other ferocious games.

During the past years the extraordinary music by The Smashing Pumpkins has proven to be of vital therapeutic significance, for which I would like to thank in particular Billy Corgan.

The mountains of planet Earth let me walk a little bit deeper into the depths of both the Universe and the human mind. The only way I could ever thank them may be to keep returning, paying respect in return for some inspiration. If spirit is God-given then mountains are divine.

The significance of four years of hard work is negligible compared to sharing eternal love and life with my dearest angel. Joaninha: I am all yours, till the end of time and beyond.
