Acknowledgements

My greatest debt is foremost to the spirit healers whose inspiration and enthusiastic collaboration allowed me not only to learn about their life and work, but in most cases also opened the door to members of their family, their patients and novices and to some extent members of their community. In particular I thank the healers 1) Marita Nakaponda, a Nyiha known as Nambela from Mbozi district, Mbeya region; 2) Jeremana Livifile, a Bena also known as Mtulahenja from Njombe district, Iringa region; 3) Alberto Kilovele, a Hehe with a practice in the mountains of Iringa district, Iringa region; 4) Joram Rupia, a Ngoni from Songea district, Ruvuma region; 5) Asia Fusi, a Ndendeuli from Songea district, Ruvuma region; 6) Bibi Kalembwana, a Ndamba from Ulanga district, Morogoro region; 7) Rachid Salam Ligogo, a Maraba, known as Nanja from Mtwarra peninsula, Mtwarra region; 8) Rokia Abdallah, known as Mwalimu Suni, a Mkonde from Masasi district, Mtwarra region; 9) Mando, a Bondei from Korogwe district, Tanga region and; 10) Nuru Nhangachallo, a Cwezi practising in Dar es Salaam who is a representative of the National Association for Traditional Healers and Midwives.

Besides the above healers I also thank all the other healers in Tanzania, who received me kindly and shared with me their insights and allowed me to observe and/or register their healing activities on tape or film. I further thank the various district and regional cultural officers, who have informed me about the spiritual healers operating in their district or region. Occasionally, the officers would accompany me to visit certain healers. Many thanks go also to the scholars of the Institute of Traditional Medicine in Dar es Salaam. At many occasions they have shared their views and experiences with me concerning traditional health care practitioners or they would be eager to learn from my findings. I thank Dr. B. Mhoro, the former technician of the Institute’s herbarium, who has identified most of the plants that I have documented and collected during the years of the study. Special thanks goes to Dr. G. Mahunnah, the director, who supported my activities and facilitated me to obtain a clearance from the National Institute of Science and Technology. Initially I had requested the Institute to collaborate in my research, but in practice this posed a number of difficulties. Another reason was that my personal budget did not allow me to pay for travelling and daily expenses for the scientists at the Institute. I also thank sociologist Dr. Simeon Mesaki for the contributions he made to this thesis as well as an earlier Swahili publication that evolved from this study some years ago.

Next to those who shared information with me during the various research periods, I owe much to my partner Daniel Alloux. He has supported me during all stages of this research project. When he accompanied me in Tanzania, he did most of the housekeeping, kept the maintenance of the car and drove the most difficult roads. Due to his help I was able to dedicate most of the time to the research. When I was in pain and unable to walk because of a fungus-infection in my foot in 1997, he nursed me during the two months I was hospitalized. I am further very grateful for the support of Prof. Dr. Joke Schrijvers, my first promoter, whose interest in my study and confidence in my approach has pulled me through this long academic journey. Given the nature of this study, I often was in doubts how to deal with the many observations and experiences. Joke's scientific and firm attitude, coupled with kindness and patience, often helped me to overcome these doubts. Further appreciation goes to the late Prof. Dr. Gerrit Huizer of the Third World Center in Nijmegen, who initially was my second promoter. Our contact dates back from before 1990, when I first went to Tanzania. His interest in the role of spirituality and healing in Western and non-Western societies boosted my confidence to pursue this study for a dissertation. Gerrit's role as second promoter was taken over by Prof. Dr. Corlien Varkevisser in 1999. Her knowledge of health care and of social relationships in Tanzania has been a contribution to this thesis. In the process of writing she also gave me critical advice on how to distant myself from the study material and how to assimilate the analysis of my findings. I thank her for these valuable lessons and also for the dedication to bring this thesis to a good end.

My gratitude also goes to InDRA (International Development Research Associates) for providing me with office facilities during the first stage of the study. During this phase I also received a small grant from GRANULLA, an association of medical students in the Netherlands, who sponsor and promote research initiatives in alternative forms of health care. In the second phase of the study I obtained a scholarship from AGIDS (Amsterdam Research Institute for Global Issues and Development Studies) allowing me to work for three years in peace to write this thesis. Both Institutes are part of the University of Amsterdam. I thank Dr. Tanya Pergola for editing the book and for taking practical steps towards the appreciation of traditional knowledge and healing practices in Tanzania. Lastly, I thank Mrs. Carina Mulié, former managing director of AGIDS, for assisting me with the lay-out.
