ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Odipo Osano graduated from Maseno high School (1983) and taught at Rangenya Primary School (1984-1985). He thereafter joined University of Nairobi for Bachelor of Veterinary Medicine (1985-1989). He was awarded a post-graduate scholarship for a Master of Veterinary Public Health by Norwegian Agency for Development (NORAD) in 1989 which culminated in a MVPH thesis (1992), excerpts later published as: O. Osano and M. Arimi, Retail Poultry as sources of Campylobacter jejuni, East Afr Med J (1999) 76: 141-143. He doubled as a Veterinary officer incharge of public health in Busia (1990-1992) and Kakamega (1992-1996) districts (Kenya), and as a veterinary clinician. He is currently affiliated to the School of Environmental Studies, Moi University. This thesis is a result of studies and research conducted mainly at Moi University (Kenya) and University of Amsterdam, (The Netherlands) and partly at other research institutions. Dr. Osano aspires to consolidate his varied experience of working at different environments to stimulate research in ecotoxicology in the tropical regions.
