Acknowledgments

I am happy to have finally reached the point of writing these acknowledgments. First of all, I would like to thank Frans van Winden, the University of Amsterdam and the Tinbergen Institute for offering me the opportunity of writing a PhD thesis in economics.

During the last three years I was lucky to work with four excellent researchers, who in addition to co-authoring allowed me generously to use our joint work in writing this book. Without their cooperation, this book would have certainly not become what it is now. My thanks go to: Frans van Winden, for an excellent supervision, a tremendous support and for posing thought-provoking and inspiring research questions; Jim Cox, for offering me the opportunity of working with him, showing me the beauty of research in experimental economics and teaching me the art of good research; Jan Tuinstra for teaching me how to chase and model interesting phenomena, for a terrific patience with my sloppy way of working and hearted intellectual encouragement; Klarita Sadiraj for a stimulating, extensive and challenging cooperation. Special thanks to Govert Bijwaard for helping me with the Dutch summary of this thesis.

Many thanks are due to all CREED-ers for a friendly and pleasant working environment. For extensive support I am particularly indebted to Jens Grosser, Ingrid Seinen and Claudia van den Bos. For a charming and wise social counsel I am grateful to Klara Gerxhani. I also thank Govert's family for providing my daughter and me with family warmth on holiday's seasons.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents and my sisters, and in particular my daughter Joy and my sister Klara for their sweet love, support and putting up with me while I was working on this thesis.
