That Desert is Our Country: Tuareg Rebellions and Competing Nationalisms in Contemporary Mali (1946-1996)

Lecocq, J.S.

Citation for published version (APA):

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: http://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.
Acknowledgements

Those who think that the path of a PhD candidate is a solitary one are utterly wrong. This manuscript would never have been, if it wasn’t for the generous help of many. Where to begin to say thank you? First of all, my love in life, Mariette, who patiently endured my physical and mental absence, my frustrations and occasional outbursts, and who still loves me. My supervisors Bonno Thoden and Robert Ross had to face my unrelenting stubbornness and strong-headedness. They deserve all the recognition which can be put in the phrase ‘you were right’. The shaikhain ash-shuyukh Sean O’Fahey and John Hunwick were among the first to encourage me in my work by giving their scientific baraka to the initial PhD project, and Knut Vikør kindly invited me to the khalwa space at the Centre for Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies in Bergen to start thinking on the path ahead. Along the way, my colleagues Mohamed ag Eghless, Nadia Belalimat, Pierre Boilley, Charles Grémont, Georg Klute and Ghislaine Lydon offered me the raw data I lacked, a contribution seldom made in science and all the more appreciated. I thank Greg Mann, whose comments on all chapter drafts prevented many mistakes in this thesis, for being my older brother. Then there are Bruce Hall, Jan Jansen, Han van Dijk, Mirjam de Bruijn, and the whole Sahel Club, who all provided useful comments and insights which I hope they will find in this work. My close colleagues at the Amsterdam School for Social Science Research, Erik Bähre, Remco Enzel, Nienke van der Heide, Mathijs Pelkmans, Oscar Verkaaijk, and Sikko Visscher, to name but a few, who gave me food for thought when I needed it. The School itself, which provided me the stimulating environment I wished for, and the means to carry out research, with special thanks to Hans Sonneveld, José Komen, Teun Bijvoet, Mirjam May, Anneke Dammers and Annelies Dijkstra. My dear friend Bairbre Duggan, who gave her time and energy to correct my far from perfect English. My dear friend R®, who fixed my computer whenever I could no longer fix it, and who let me work on his when mine was inadequate. I thank my dear friend and closest colleague Paul Schrijver for providing the one stable moment in my week - our Friday meetings at which we muse about our works and lives over a beer. My favourite guitar player Mousssa Keyna, who helped me with translations as good as he could and whose inside knowledge is on a good number of pages, should not be forgotten. My dear friend Mathijs ‘mafman’ Beyer, who cheered me up with a smile but who was also able to sift out a large number of typos in the manuscript. And these are just some of the people back home, helping me to write.

In Mali, I would have been nowhere, if my ‘older sisters’ Mama Alghaliya ouled Mohamed and Maghniyya ouled Mohamed had not opened their hearts, minds and houses to me in Bamako and Menaka, and still nowhere without the lessons of my ‘mothers’ Takhnouna and Fitou. Although the voices of these and other women are not explicitly heard in this book full of men, the rough, fast-track education they gave me and the backgrounds they explained to me form the solid basis of this work. I would have been lost if my friends Ibrahim ag Litny and Cheick ag Baye had not pointed me in some directions.
I would have been stuck in Kidal without the support and lectures of 'ustâdh Mohamed Lamine ag Mohamed Fall, and the quiet afternoon conversations with my friend Sidi Moussa. I would still think Gao was a dull and uninteresting place, if local historian Lamine ag Bilal had not helped me in finding all these interesting interlocutors, including himself, and if it wasn’t for Ahmed Landji who lodged me with the kindest of Algerian hospitality.

My stay in Menaka would have been less rewarding, and less pleasant, if it wasn’t for Kees and Jeske Zevenbergen, Sharif, Krista, Annemiek and Munawar. The whole book would have been less interesting if so many people in northern Mali hadn’t taken an interest: Premier Adjoint du Cercle de Kidal Marc Dara and Haut Conseiller du Région de Kidal Eglese ag Foni, who gave me access to the Archives du Cercle de Kidal, Amegha and Keyni ag Sherif, Intalla ag Attaher, Alghabas ag Intalla, Abounahya, Bay ag Alhassan, Baba, Fatima, Taghlift, Nina, Keddu, Mayaki, Likki, Sidi, Nuhum, M'barek... alkher adjin hulan, hulan, hulan. And that’s just fieldwork.

The Archives Nationales du Mali were more than a work place, they were quite close to a kind of home, thanks to the kindness and help of Dr. Aly Ongoiba, Timothé Saye, Abdoulaye Traoré, and Alia Baby, who are an example of efficiency and service to the archivist’s trade.

May all those I have not named take no offense, knowing that I do know what they did for me. No acknowledgement is complete without the disclaimer: all errors in this work are mine and mine alone.