Ever since I went to high school, my dream was to study abroad. As impossible as that was in a communist regime, I was lucky to be young enough to seize the opportunity when it occurred (after the collapse of the regime). I realized I had a chance when I started to work as a junior researcher on the informal sector at the Albanian Center for Economic Research (ACER). My career as a researcher owes a great deal to the training and experience I received from working at the ACER.

My dream became a reality. I was given the opportunity to work on this thesis, which has taken me four years of academic research. This could have not been accomplished without the initiative of my supervisor Michael Ellman, who I am grateful to for always being there when I needed him, and for his prompt comments, suggestions and solutions.

During the first years of my research, I had the pleasure to work in a beautiful building at a wonderful location, but above all, in the nice atmosphere of the Tinbergen Institute. I still recall my continuous and sometimes annoying questions to Elfie, Marian and Jeroen. Thank you all for bearing with me. Especially, I have not forgotten the hot and very pleasant conversations with the caring Elfie, and the short but cheerful talks with Maarten, the director.

I want to express my gratitude to everyone at CREED for giving me the opportunity to spend about half a year in their cozy and pleasant atmosphere with plenty of coffee (and cake) breaks. I am especially grateful to Claudia for helping me with my Dutch and for her sweetness and everlasting smile.

My empirical research would have not been possible without the financial support of my supervisor, RESAM, CREED, the Tinbergen Institute, NWO and the Stichting Moret Funds. The cooperation of the Vossius gymnasium and the Faculty of Economics of the University of Amsterdam in Amsterdam, and “H. Fultz” high school and the Faculty of Economics of the University of Tirana in Tirana were as important.

My life in- and outside my work would have not been the same without my friends. Although living abroad, I was lucky enough to keep benefiting from the electronic and personal contacts with my dear Albanian friends: Mirela with her demanding way of keeping contact, Dola, Klara and Vjollca with their professional assistance and kindness, Genta with her joyful spirit,
Matilda with her unique character, and Anila with her jokes and addictive laugh. However, it does not end here. During the four years of writing this thesis, I was so fortunate to make new friends: the sweet Ibolya, Froukje, Ingrid, Mauro and Edwin, the caring and always helpful Ada, my patient Italian ‘teacher’ Silvia, the calm Silva, Ruta, Marije and Aslan, and the pleasant trio of bachelors Jens, Aljaz and Nick.

Going through a Ph.D. is a unique and often difficult experience. However, as with everything else, a pleasant and enjoyable personal life makes it a lot easier. Here is where I want to give special thanks to Andrée for being a friend and for her hardheaded persistence in speaking only Dutch to me; Eva for her sweetness to me and her unbelievable way of approaching life; and Alex for his optimism and sweet smile whenever he sees me.

My family has always stood behind me throughout the whole period. I want to express my tremendous gratitude and love to my mother for the sweet and loving appreciation that only a mother can give; my father for his endless and sometimes exhausting faith in me and for his concrete help regarding certain organizational aspects related to this thesis; my brother for his sweet caring and interest and for awakening my interest in tennis, which I have become so addicted to; and Arthur, who I have been so lucky to meet and be close to. His extraordinary optimism, courage and love have been a tremendous drive for me to accomplish successfully this part of my professional life. I cannot find words to express my respect for his talent, efficiency and love for his work. It is as difficult to express my gratitude for the professional, critical and unbiased guidance he assisted me with to the academic world of economics. And finally, I could find words to express my love to him as the one and only, but I will leave it at this point as far as this thesis is concerned.
