When I first began working on this thesis more than four years ago, I was very much focused on the end result i.e. what you are now about to read. But as I progressed along in reading, collecting and analyzing data, and finally writing up the results, I realized that the research process was perhaps as important and maybe even more important than the end result. The process was characterized by moments of euphoria as well as less than euphoric moments. It is here at the beginning of my thesis that I would like to acknowledge some of those individuals who positively contributed to making these four years a worthwhile journey.

First I would like to thank my supervisor, Michael Ellman who accepted me to be his PhD student on a seemingly pure act of faith. His disciplined and professional approach to research served as an inspiration to me. I also thank him for his sense of fairness which helped me feel relatively secure through the oftentimes turbulent process of thesis writing.

I would also like to thank those individuals who helped improve draft versions of various sections of this thesis including comments on gender issues by Loes Keysers, institutional theory by Ruud Knaack, W.F. Sleegers for hierarchical clustering and Ward's grouping methods and Nerijus Udrėnas for useful comments on the historical sections of the thesis. Also I would like to thank Cecilie Wetzels, Louise Grogan, Ada Ferrer-i-Carbonell, Marco van Gelderen, Siv Gustaffson, Klara Gerxhani and Aslan Zorlu for comments on draft chapters. Kris Burke deserves a special mention in her role in helping me get in touch with Justinas.

A special thanks to those individuals who took the time to meticulously translate and proofread the thesis summaries. To Nerijus Udrėnas, Aušra Listavičiūtė and my dear parents for the Lithuanian summary and Casper Kaandorp, Naomi Leefmans and Froukje Mebius for the Dutch summary.

My years as a PhD student have gone through three distinct phases and I would like to thank the individuals who have helped me during these different periods. My experience as a PhD student began at the Tinbergen Institute in Amsterdam. I would like to thank Arianne, Katrin, Gallit and Hsiang-Ke for making that period of time more enjoyable. Also special thanks to Elfie Bonke and Marian Duppen who were always ready to help or lend a listening ear. In addition, thanks to Maartin Lindeboom for his cheerful positive energy in the capacity of Director of Graduate Studies.

The second distinct phase came during my fieldwork in Lithuania. I would first of all, like to thank both the IIE and NWO for their generous financial support that made it possible for me to collect my own qualitative and quantitative data analyzed in this thesis.

Further, in Lithuania, I would like to thank professor Gina Zineitiene for all her professional assistance and advice as well as friendship. Also I am indebted to my assistants Asta Žižyte for data processing, Ramūnas Bučius for braving the cold with me and co-conducting the interviews at Gariunai and to Ignas Žvinakevičius for his help in preparing the questionnaires for postage. I would also like to thank Kęstutis Spurga for his willingness to help me with whatever information I needed to gather and Irena Spurgienė who also looked out for my general well being. A big thanks to Rima Žvinakevičienė’s friendship, assistance, and general support throughout my four months in Lithuania. Finally I would like to thank all the SME owners and related officials who took the time to respond to the questionnaire or agreed to meet with me in person. Your participation made the analysis in this thesis possible.

My last and best PhD years were spent on the 8th floor of the Faculty of Economics and Econometrics at the University of Amsterdam. Writing and analyzing can be a tough and oftentimes frustrating process and I thank Cecile, Ibolya, Klara, Ada, Matthijs, Naomi, Aslan, Suncica, Froukje, Peter, Eiko and Deborah for their friendship and much needed distractions. In addition, my gratitude to Robert Helmink for teaching me new dance steps, providing useful fashion advice and being my pal. Casper deserves special mention here for his sense of humor, musical interludes, computer expertise, abiding support and ability to show me the brighter side of life when things seemed utterly and pathetically hopeless. Last but not least, thanks to Loes, Irena and Sebastiène from the secretariat.

In addition, I would like to thank Louise for her long-distance friendship and for managing to show up in Amsterdam at crucial moments to instill me with her good cheer. Also much thanks to my American and Chilean sisters Karen and Lorena for inspiring me and for always making me feel so special.

I extend my thanks to my dear friends Rūta, Cisca & Ysabel, Irma, Marianne, Guus, Truus, Dagmarella, Ko, Suman, Matilde, Eveline, Jeanette, Evelyn, Chantal, Marjolijn, Marieke and Ita who helped remind me that there is more to life than just academics.

Most importantly, I would like to express my thanks to my parents for their unwavering support, eagerness to assist and enthusiastic attitude towards my PhD work. Also thanks to my brother for his interest and for keeping in touch with me in spite of the distance.

I thank Amsterdam, a city I learned to love for her unostentatious nature, her canals, her bicycles, her dynamic, creative energy and her sunny smile mischievously shining through torrents of rain. Finally, I extend my utmost appreciation to all those individuals who touched me with a gesture of unexpected kindness reminding me that the moment, this moment is a precious treasure.
