The process of undertaking a PhD research at the University of Amsterdam (UvA) started in 1996 when the Moi University’s School of Environmental Studies (MU-SES) nominated me as a recipient of Jan Tinbergen Scholarship. This scholarship was for 6 months tenable in the Netherlands and time was to be spent preparing a PhD research proposal. Prof Dr. Ton Dietz (Scientific Director of AGIDs) took it upon himself to introduce me to the Research School for Development Studies (CERES) in 1997 and to my supervisors. I really appreciate his efforts and continuous encouragement.

It is not practically possible to mention by names all people who have been very instrumental in this undertaking. I acknowledge the encouragement and quality supervision I got from my promoters Prof dr. G. A de Bruijne, Prof Dr. ISA Baud, Dr. J. Post and Dr. K. Mwangi. The interests shown by the entire supervision team, itself a partnership, led to the successful completion of this work. At the initial stages of the PhD project, I received comments from Dr. Kibe Mwai who was to be a co-promotor. The editors Dr. Mirjam Ros-Tonen and Ralph Brink contributed considerably in making this book readable. To this end, I/O-Graph is acknowledged for drawing the maps and for the lay-out of the book.

I am grateful to the Netherlands Foundation for the Advancement of Tropical Research (WOTRO) for awarding me a 4-year research grant to undertake the PhD studies at the University of Amsterdam. In this regard, I acknowledge the institutional support I received from the Amsterdam Research Institute for Global Issues and Development Studies (AGIDS). I hope we maintain future research partnerships. It’s also with thanks that I acknowledge the continued discussions with my colleagues at the Department of Sociology, Egerton University, though I was venturing into a very unpopular field of study. I am also grateful to my employer for granting me a 4-year paid study leave and the assistance I have received all along. I look forward to continue my teaching and research assignments there. To this end, I am also thankful to the Government of the Republic of Kenya for granting me a research permit number OP 13/001/28c 111.

The financial assistance that I received from International Institute for Environment and Development (IIED), London is highly acknowledged, as I was able to go to the field for a final lap to have some discussions with stakeholders involved in the LA 21 in Nakuru. This chance did not only allow me complete the IIED assignment but also enriched the information presented in Chapter 7 and is also published by IIED as a working paper. Thanks to Institute of Development Studies (IDS), UK for showing a lot of interest in my work and highlighting the research on the front page of their website.

Mr. Isaac Kimani, a Senior Public Health Officer of Municipal Council of Nakuru (MCN) deserves special mention. He introduced me to most of the community leaders and other contacts within MCN. The frequent updates on recent changes in Nakuru made this study reflect emerging issues and hence present some interesting findings. Within the MCN, I received a lot of cooperation from other officers the Public Health Department including S. C. Kiarie, Stephen Kimani, Macharia and Kamau; Elijah Omedo, Ongeri and Engineer Maina of the Water Company, J. M. Mwangi, Paul Chege, Margaret Ng’ayu and a number of councillors including former Councillor V. Ondedo. I need to acknowledge the various discussions I held with CBO leaders who also were my key informants: Clement Njuguna and Esther Kiragu of Lakeview, Erastus Mukuna and Benard Barkurei of NAROKA, Simon Maina and Daudi Kimemу of Kwaronda Neighbourhood and finally Alice Githuka of Gwichokereria Women Group in Mwariki neighbourhood. The household survey discussed in this book would not have been completed without the support I got from my research assistants: Wangari, Karuru, Moses, Wambui and Andati. I also acknowledge the assistance I got from B. Karanja who did the data entry.

Jimmy Ruto on his own journey at AMC deserves special acknowledgement. He continuously helped me settle, re-settle and eventually get a room in a city where getting affordable accommodation takes several weeks. Kenyan families in the Netherlands really made me feel at home not only in sharing good moments but also eating together, reminding me of our social nature. To this end, the families of Rashid Ambo and Eddie Ochiel and the good times we had together helped ease the lonely life abroad. The companies of Wario Adano, Gatari, Yesharu, Wario, Sam Ouma, Odipo, Ben Mwasi, Vincent, Sam Muniafu, office mates Obirih-Opareh, Smith, Mirjam and later Gichia Njogu kept the fire going even when it seemed I had reached the end of the road. I really appreciate all the times we had together. Karatu Kiemo and Isaac Tarus at Upsalla and Rhodes Universities respectively made me feel that I wasn’t the only one doing PhD abroad. Our daily encouragements via e-mails are worth mentioning. My very close friends, Ndungu Kamau and Kamau Kinyanjui at State University at Buffalo and Binghamton respectively in the USA on their own journey there contributed to the successful completion of this work. Thank you for your visits and frequent calls to my family during the time I left for Amsterdam barely a month after our wedding. I hope by now you understand what I was going through. I am grateful to all the electronic friends and colleagues both at home and abroad, including the Daily Nation and the East African Standard online papers for keeping me informed on the developments and news in Kenya.

Through it all, my dear wife Beth has been very supportive. The daily e-mail messages, sms and several phone calls kept me going and I knew that everything was going on well at home. She persevered the many lonely days and nights and undertook most of my duties. God will always bless you for this. I really hope that one day, Brian, our son, born along this process will understand why papa was absent for such a long time. My mother, my late dad, brothers and sisters and cousin Jason Wokabi Thuo have been an inspiration in my entire academic life. I am very grateful for your continued support and God will bless you in a mighty way.

Finally, to the residents of Nakuru and the low-income inhabitants, this is what I have to say: 'pamoja tunaweza'.
