During the last years, when I was a PhD student at the University of Amsterdam, I received many help from various people around me. Without their kind help I would not have been able to write this book, and I am very happy to express my gratitude towards them in this section.

First, I would like to express my deepest gratitude towards my supervisors: Hans Bennis, Hans den Besten and Jeroen Groenendijk. Hans Bennis taught me how to reason and argument scientifically. I very much enjoyed all our discussions. Hans den Besten has always been available to help me out with all different kinds of questions. His encyclopaedic knowledge is admirable. Jeroen Groenendijk was always there to answer any semantic question.

In this respect, I would also like to thank the following people: Aafke Hulk, who was my former promotor, for always standing behind me; Sjie Barbiers, who coordinated the Syntactic Atlas of Dutch Dialects (SAND) project, for the many conversations and his patience with my way of doing fieldwork; Paul Dekker for bridging the gap between the linguists and the philosophers in Amsterdam and for introducing me in the Amsterdam semantics community; Fred Weerman for bringing new life into the Dutch linguistics group and for willing to read my papers, abstracts, etc. and many fruitful discussions; Arnim von Stechow, finally, for being a great inspirer and having invited me to come to work in Tübingen. I am glad that you were all willing to join the reading committee.

I was very lucky to be able to participate in several linguistic communities, which all proved to be very stimulating surroundings. The Dutch linguistics group grew rapidly over the past few years and formed a nice environment to work in. I enjoyed the many discussions during lunches, varying from the latest minimalist papers to the weird developments in Dutch politics. Maren Panneman and Suzanne Aalberse, you were great roommates.

In my first year as a PhD student I was part of the Holland Institute for generative Linguistics (HIL). This institute was a profound place to do research and up till today I still can’t understand what the bureaucrats had in mind when they decided to split up this institute. I would like to thank the (former) HIL members for their accepting me to their graduate program.

The Amsterdam Center for Language and Communication (ACLC) is more and more turning into a nice platform for many different ideas about language. The Friday afternoon borrels were very pleasant and often let to interesting exchanges of ideas. I have good memories of the weekly AiO-lunches.
I want to thank the members of the Institute for Logic, Language & Computation for their hospitality. I very much enjoyed the cooperation with the semanticists and pragmaticians, especially in the fall of 2003 and the spring of 2004 when I was offered a working place in the Vendelstraat building. Special thanks to Marian Counihan for sharing her desk and computer with me.

The SAND project was a very fruitful environment to work in, partly due to its pioneering character. Jeroen van Craenenbroeck and Marjo van Koppen were pleasant colleagues to collaborate with. Many thanks to Margreet van der Ham for coping with the coordination of all practical matters.

One of the most satisfactory elements in my linguistic life has been the Central Eastern European Summerschool in Generative Grammar, also known as the egg. The egg is an environment where a linguistic battlefield is synonymous to a crazy party floor. The combination of intellectual debate, appealing courses, the lack of hierarchy (except in syntactic structures) and lots of fun made many of my new ideas emerge. I am very happy to work together with Michal Starke, Tobias Scheer, Klaus Abels, Jonathan Kaye and Luisa Marti to organize this school and I am grateful for their friendship.

Thanks to a scholarship provided by the Dutch Research Foundation (NWO) I was able to spend three months as a visiting student at New York University (NYU). In the first place I would like to thank Anna Szabolcsi for all her enthusiasm, her critical comments and her advices. I would also like to thank Mark Baltin, Paul Elbourne and Paul Postal and Marcel Den Dikken and Janet Dean Fodor of the City University of New York (CUNY) for interesting courses and discussions. Finally I would like the members of the linguistic departments of NYU, CUNY and SUNY Stony Brook for providing a great intellectually and socially attractive atmosphere.

I was also offered to spend a short time at the linguistic department of the Ca'Foscari University in Venice. I want to express my gratitude towards Walther Schweikert and Guglielmo Cinque for their invitation and our interesting conversations.

I would like to thank the members of the Tübingen linguistics community for the warm welcome they provided me. Specials thanks go to Doris Penka for all the preparations she did for our project ‘Typology and Logical Form of Sentential Negation’ and for introducing me to my new working place. I also wanted to thank Manfred Sailer for his hospitality and Beate Starke for dealing with all the administrational matters and for providing me a place to live.

Apart from the above-mentioned there are many colleagues who have all helped me with my study in some way. I am much indebted to Enoch Aboh, MartaAbrusan, Peter Ackema, Paolo Acquaviva, Artemis Alexiadou, Ingrid van Alphen, Diana Apoussidou, Jacques Arends, Boban Arsenijevic, Johan van der Auwera, John Bailyn, Anne Baker, Dik Bakker, Kata Balogh, Artur Bartnik, Margot van den Berg, Gianina

Parts of this work have been presented at various conferences. I would like to thank the respective audiences for their valuable comments.

This research would never have been possible without the friendly cooperation of the informants for the SAND project. I owe much to all those who were willing to help us with their judgements and answering questions about the most exotic and weird constructions.

Thanks to Keetje van den Heuvel for all the help she provided during the printing process.

I have received a lot of support by many friends and relatives, especially during the final stage of this dissertation. Jurriaan van der Stok and Marius van Dam, I am very happy with our friendships and I am glad that you will be my paranimfen. I also would like to thank Jan Willem Romeyn for sincere friendship, for ongoing discussions, for reading parts of this thesis and for being my neighbour again.

I would like to thank my parents, Anneke and Jan Hein, for having supported me over the last 29 years and having made things possible for me.

Finally, I want to thank Petra for all her love, patience and support. I realise sometimes you felt you had to share me with NegP. I am glad that now we are able to spend more time together. With all my love, this book is dedicated to you.
