Uncertain divides: religion, ethnicity, and politics in the Georgian borderlands

Pelkmans, M.

Citation for published version (APA):
Table of Contents

Acknowledgements xi
Summary xiii
Maps xv

Introduction
- Disruptions in the Caucasus and the Ajarian exception 4
- Borders, boundaries, and frontiers: A research approach 9
- Fieldwork: The anthropologist on the border 15
- Structure of this dissertation 24

Part I - The religious frontier: Islam and Christianity in Upper Ajaria 27

On the frontier 29

1. The making and transformation of the frontier 36
- The making of the frontier 38
- The transformation of the frontier 44
- Public religion in contested space 52
- Conclusion 63

2. Defending Muslim identity against the tides 65
- The worries of the hodjas 66
- Difficulties of restoring and maintaining Muslim identity 68
- Finding ways out 76
- Muslim identity against the tides 83

3. On the role of ancestors and enemies in religious conversion 86
- Talking about conversion 88
- Narratives of conversion: Continuity, enemies, and progress 93
- Baptisms and biography 100
- Baptized Georgian: Mobilizing ancestors and other kin 104
4. The contents and dynamics of religious change
   The post-Soviet 'believer' on the frontier
   Frontiers of identity

Part II - The Georgian-Turkish border: Kinship and ethnicity in a divided village

Divided village

5. Caught between states
   Border regime
   Espionage, executions and deportations
   Remembering and forgetting
   Time and the border

6. Jason and the new Argonauts
   Soviet trajectories
   Marriage and ethnicity
   The cultural stuff
   Shifting ethnic boundaries

7. Lost relatives
   Renewed and aborted contacts
   Managing difference
   Grounding difference
   Conclusion

Part III - Borderlands of modernity: Imagining and experiencing
' the transition' in Batumi

In the borderlands

8. Channeling discontent
   The opening of the border
   Diminished opportunities and inverted flows
   Evil and sacred commodities
   Conspiracies and the market
   Preserving the dream
9. The social life of empty buildings 222
   Multiple transitions 224
   Emptiness 226
   Biographies of emptiness 228
   Imagining the future through the past 234
   Almost empty buildings and the transition 237

Conclusion: Borders in time and space 239
   The rigidity of the Iron Curtain 240
   Frozen histories and fixed cultures 243
   Distant neighbors and immediate dangers 246
   Uncertain divides 249

Glossary 251

Bibliography 253

Summary in Dutch 265